RHODESIAN LEADER
BARS BRITISH PLAN
By Reuters
SALISBURY, Rhodesia, March 23—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith today rejected an extreme British proposal for legalizing Rhodesia's independence based on black majority rule.

Mr. Smith said in a statement after a Cabinet meeting that Foreign Secretary James Callaghan, who announced the plan to Parliament in London yesterday, had "chosen to disregard the realities and had gone forward with proposals no less extreme than those of the African National Council."

By LINDA GREENHOUSE
Special to The New York Times
ALBANY, March 23—Governor Carey warned today that the cuts the Legislature made last week in his budget requests for state agencies and departments were "unworkable and counterproductive" and could "make it impossible for us to do the job" of running the state.

Mr. Carey made his comments at an impromptu news conference in his office. His fiscal aides later said the new budget was under intensive review and that there were few specifics available yet on the impact of the cuts.

House Budget Chief Urges More Spending Than Ford

By EILEEN SHANAHAN
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 23—Representative Brock Adams, who is chairman of the House Budget Committee, proposed today that the Federal Government spend $12.8 billion next year, $18.6 billion more than President Ford recommended.

Mr. Adams said that the increase was necessary to stop shifting of priorities from human resource programs to defense and to make sure that restrictive budget policies do not "arrest the beginning of economic recovery."

U.S. Offers a Plan For Big Tariff Cuts

By VICTOR A. LUSINCHI
Special to The New York Times
GENEVA, March 23—The United States today presented a formula at the world trade negotiations here under which industrialized countries would cut their tariffs as much as 60 percent.

The mathematical formula would reduce tariffs in two ways: It would permit across-the-board, or linear, reductions by an agreed percentage. And it would also narrow the spread between high and low tariff rates.

Court Curbs Federal Suits On Defamation by Officials

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, March 23—Over a strong dissent by three Justices, the Supreme Court ruled today that the Constitution gives citizens only limited protection and recourse against public officials who defame them.

Specifically, the Court ruled that state and local officials, such as policemen who defame a citizen, may not be sued in Federal court for alleged civil rights violations if the defamation resulted merely in injury to the person's reputation.

Papal Birth Stand Found to Hurt Church

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS
Overwhelming rejection by the Roman Catholic laity in the United States of the 1968 papal ban on artificial birth control has led to drastic declines in religious devotion and annually costs the church nearly a billion dollars in income, according to a survey of Catholic attitudes released yesterday by the National Opinion Research Center.

The report, issued in a 483-page book entitled "Catholic Schools in a Declining Church," further shows that support for parochial schools remains strong despite the church's general retreat from that field. The study, a 10-year follow-up of a 1963 survey, raises critical questions about church decisions. It calls the birth-control decision "both a failure and an organizational and religious disaster." At the same time, it notes that "Catholic schools seem substantially more important today than they were a decade ago" but that "fewer resources are allowed them."

The report says that Catholics would have given $5.5 billion to the church in 1974 if they had given at 1963 levels. But even though Catholics were more affluent than they were a decade ago, they gave only $3.8 billion.

Close Arab Area Arch for Slain Boy

By TERENCE SMITH
Special to The New York Times

Hebron's shopkeepers also staged a general strike as a form of protest against continued Israeli occupation, which began after the 1967 war. Israeli soldiers managed to restore order in the town center after about an hour, but the riot demonstrated the inability of the local Arab leadership to control the population after three weeks of almost continuous demonstrations.

On Sunday, Sheik Mohammed Ali Jabari, the 71-year-old Mayor who has ruled Hebron with an authoritarian hand for four decades, promised the Israeli authorities that he would restore order in the town. In response to his pledge, most of the Israeli troops were withdrawn from the streets. Today, his men were able to remove only some of the larger roadblocks. It required a contingent of soldiers and riot policemen to break up the demonstration. "If Sheik Jabari can't control a leading Arab lawyer covering the day, then the situation is genuinely out of hand. We have no leadership anymore. That means that the rioting is likely to continue on its own momentum rather than die out." Scattered demonstrations were reported elsewhere on the West Bank but Nablus and East Jerusalem, the two principal centers, were generally quiet.

Gunmen Capture Christian Areas in Downtown Beirut

At the American University Hospital, red-headed gunmen from the left-wing Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command wheeled their wounded with assault rifles slung on their backs. "I am going to leave this country," whispered a Lebanese man, his head draped with a belt of 50-caliber machine-gun bullets. "I cannot stand the boom, boom anymore." This evening artillery shells began falling in western Beirut, and huge plumes of black smoke rose from the ruined waterfront area. The Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine distributed pamphlets in western Beirut calling for the expulsion of the Syrian-run As Sa'iqah guerrilla organization from the Prestige Liberation Organization.

According to reliable Palestinian and Lebanese informants, a small number of Al Fatah guerrillas helped an alliance of Muslim and leftist fighters shell the Holiday Inn Sunday afternoon. The Palestinians quickly left the scene but the leftists failed to clean out the last pockets of resistance in the 26-story hotel, and the Phalangists managed to move back into an annex of the structure. In their counterattack Monday, the Phalangists for the first time in Lebanon's civil war shelled the western neighborhood with artillery. Angered, Mr. Arafat reportedly ordered his guerrillas to join the leftists in strength, and the Phalangists were pushed out of the Holiday Inn. While the Phalangists and the opposing militias have battled each other for months, Mr. Jumblat, who commands 7,000 well-armed men, has held his force in reserve, and some Lebanese believe that he would like to come out on top once the fighting ends. As the head of the small but influential Druse sect, and leader of the Progressive Socialist Party, Mr. Jumblat has an interest in seeing Lebanon's sectarian political arrangement turned into a more secular system, which has been the basis of his own program of reforms. Mr. Jumblat, who has threatened to "disarm" the fighting Christian militias, was reported to be in the so-called Druse capital of Aley, from where his partisans were said to be shelling the Christian town of Kahale.

who have been throwing up illegal housing in the village of Ouzai, next to the airport. After one of their people was killed, according to accounts from the area, Ouzai gunmen fired a rocket-propelled grenade at a Sa'iqah jeep, wounding two guerrillas. Monday night, the P.L.O.'s Executive Committee met under its chairman, Yasir Arafat, and afterward issued a communiqué that "stressed the necessity of complete unity with the national movement and the Lebanese masses."

Muslims in Beirut pushed Christian forces out of Holiday Inn. The battle shifted to Starco area. Gunmen in Beirut suburb shelled the Presidential palace at Baabda.

Negotiations Are Key to Future Of Jerusalem, U.S. Says at U.N.

By PAUL HOFMANN
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., March 23 — The United States restated today its view that the future of Jerusalem would be determined by negotiations rather than by one-sided action, and declared that Jewish settlements in Israeli-occupied Arab territories were an obstacle in the search for peace between Israel and its neighbors. The American position on Middle East problems was outlined by the new United States representative, William W. Scranton, during a Security Council debate on unrest in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

The debate, which started yesterday, is expected to end tomorrow with a vote on a resolution that is still under discussion by delegates of Arab and Islamic countries and other observers seemed intent on detecting departures from earlier United States statements on the Middle East. Several diplomats none of whom wanted to be identified, said the first impression was that Mr. Scranton's evulsion of the situation in the Israeli-occupied areas seemed to be more sober toward Israel than were the public remarks of his predecessor at the United Nations, Daniel P. Moynihan. Delegates from Arab countries said tonight that they had liked the "tone" of Mr. Scranton's statement. There was no immediate reaction from the Israeli mission.

Mr. Scranton told the Security Council that the Israeli occupation of territories in the 1967 war "was always seen by the world community to be an abnormal state of affairs that would be brought to an end by a peace settlement." Referring to the fact that a dispute over prayers by Jews on Temple Mount in Jerusalem had preceded the latest wave of anti-Israeli demonstrations, Mr. Scranton said that Israel's punctilious administration of the holy places in Jerusalem had minimized the tensions. Temple Mount is a site holy to Jews, Christians and Muslims. Last Sunday, Israel's Supreme Court reversed the decision of a lower magistrate who had ruled that Jews were not doing anything unlawful by praying at Temple Mount. The first ruling caused Moslem protests.

Mr. Scranton, in today's statement, indicated that the United States might use its veto power to block the draft resolution. A high United States official said privately that no decision had yet been made whether an American veto would be imposed, because the draft resolution was not yet known. The important thing, the official said, was to avoid an impression that there was a change in the United States policy to the Middle East. "There isn't," the source said firmly. Left-Wing Guerrillas a Force in Argentine Factories

By JONATHAN KANDELL
Special to The New York Times

CORDOBA, Argentina, March 23—Argentina's left-wing guerrillas, once a terrorist middle-class elite, have emerged in recent months as a major force in the factories.

Taking advantage of raging inflation and other economic uncertainties, the guerrillas have wooed workers by forcing management in key industries to sign labor contracts far in excess of salary increases obtained by conservative Peronist union leaders.

The two main guerrilla groups are a Marxist organization, the People's Revolutionary Army, and the Montoneros, a leftist offshoot of the Peronist movement.

The guerrillas, believed to number several thousand men, are well financed by millions of dollars obtained in kidnap ransoms. They have gained most of their publicity by spectacular kidnappings, a daily assassination campaign against policemen, and occasional large-scale attacks against military installations in which they have been easily beaten back, suffering great losses by army troops.

But the guerrillas, who have been derided in the past as a small university-bred elite with little appeal among the working class, have apparently scored large recent gains with the country's restless labor force.

By applying their techniques of kidnappings, bombings and assassinations, they have coerced an increasing number of industrial companies into accepting wage demands advanced by the more radical trade unionists.

The guerrillas have used the threat of violence to prevent the dismissal of workers. They have even interceded on behalf of workers accused of unwarranted absenteeism, which according to the Peronist Government has reached record levels of more than 20 percent in the industrial labor force.

Over the last year, 22 foreign and Argentine executives have been slain, scores kidnapped, and hundreds of others intimidated by bombs or threatening letters and phone calls.

On the other hand, right-wing terrorist groups—in many cases clearly connected with the police and military intelligence—have kidnapped and killed hundreds of guerrilla suspects over the last year.

The influence of the guerrillas on the factory floors has grown partly because left-wing labor leaders have been largely wiped out or driven underground while the more conservative Peronist trade unionists have been torn between their allegiance to President Isabel Martínez de Perón's economic austerity measures and the demands of their rank and file.

But the main reason for the guerrilla advances in labor has been the rapidly deteriorating economic situation. Inflation, which reached 330 percent in 1975, is climbing even faster this year, and the specter of recession and rising unemployment has created widespread insecurity and anger among the working class.

The pattern of guerrilla gains in the labor force has been clearest in this automotive industry center, about 430 miles northwest of Buenos Aires. With about a million people, Córdoba is the second largest city in Argentina and has traditionally had a more left-wing union movement than the rest of the country.

"At this point, the guerrillas can count on the passive or active support of a majority of our workers," said an executive with Fiat's Concord, a subsidiary of the Italian automobile manufacturer. "Inflation is so bad that even workers who are not Marxist will gladly accept salary increases obtained for them by guerrillas."

The executive's view was echoed by his colleagues in other large industrial plants here, including Ika-Renault, also an automobile manufacturer, and the Perkins diesel factory.

Fiat Is Biggest

Fiat is the largest automotive manufacturer in the country. Half of its 20,000 workers are employed in its three Córdoba plants.

Like the rest of the auto industry, Fiat gave in to guerrilla demands for an illegal 23 percent wage increase for workers last December.

The guerrillas, in this case the Montoneros, obtained the salary increases by kidnapping Enrique Metz, an executive with the Mercedes-Benz subsidiary, and holding him for two months.

The Montoneros collected a $4 million ransom, which they called a "fine." They also forced Mercedes-Benz to reinstate more than 100 workers who had been dismissed, and extracted promises from management that no reprisals would be taken against workers.

In a communiqué, the guerrillas noted that Mr. Metz was kidnapped only 10 days after labor troubles broke out at Mercedes-Benz.

"The speed of our action was possible thanks to valuable information passed on to us by the workers," the guerrillas asserted.

40% Raise Sought

Restive trade unionists backed by guerrillas, are now asking for an additional increase of 40 percent.

Despite repeated increases in wages, inflation has been climbing so fast that the average auto worker makes about $70 a month. And even that low income places him among the blue-collar elite.

"I would not even know if I have met a guerrilla," said a 32-year-old welder who works for Ika-Renault. "But prices keep going up, and I want as high a salary as I can get. If the company agrees to pay, it is because they can afford it."

Auto executives also say that guerrillas have sought to undermine labor discipline. More than 40 Fiat employees, many of them supervisors, had been placed in homes. Most of the executives have been bodyguards.

Two company doctors who had a reputation for lax in approving sick workers, quit after were bombed.

The doctor who them will give anybody who asks a Fiat executive.

Absenteeism in Fiat plants here is to 30 percent even through the work which turns out for trucks and a minority of work their posts. The r in small "deliberate meeting to discuss cent wage demand. The heightened and guerrilla coincided with a right-wing terror and in the rest of military would be a form of pressure, in this case, but Mrs. Peron has said repeatedly that she intends to complete her term, which ends May 25, 1977.

Military Moves to Depose Mrs. Peron

As tank columns were seen moving tonight from the big armored base at Magdalena toward La Plata, which is under full military control, General Videla and the commanders of the navy and air force, Adolfo Massera and wing Orlando Agosti, met with Minister of Defense José Deheza.

Mr. Deheza then went to the Casa Rosada, the presidential palace in downtown Buenos Aires, where Mrs. Peron was waiting with loyal Peronist party and labor leaders.

There was a small crowd of party faithful outside the Casa Rosada, but many Argentines were more interested in the television broadcast of a soccer match here tonight between River Plate, the national champions, against a Venezuelan team.

Despite rumors throughout the day of the impending fall of Mrs. Peron, there was no public alarm. The streets were crowded with people going about their business, restaurants and shops were busy, children went to school, and trains and buses ran.

Mrs. Peron went to her presidential offices at noon yesterday and received the credentials of the new ambassadors of Switzerland and Rwanda.

She then went into conference with Minister of Labor Miguel Unamuno, and labor leaders, who had been summoned to consider what steps the Peronist unions should take to "defend the Government."

Deheza, Bittel, Governor of Chaco Province and first vice president of the Peronist party, met with representatives of five political parties, including the Radical Party president, Ricardo Balbin, to discuss preparations for national elections scheduled for December.

But these moves did not appear to have any backing outside the small circle of Peronist "loyalists" who still actively support Mrs. Peron after 21 months in office.

May of the top labor leaders, including Casildo Herreras, secretary general of the General Confederation of Labor, have gone to Uruguay, where Mr. Herreras said that he had "erased" himself from the Argentine political crisis.

Many members of Congress, after collecting their paychecks, had cleaned out their offices and left, in the expectation that the military will close Congress.

"The end is imminent," said the afternoon newspaper La Razón in a banner headline. "There is nothing more to say."

The breakdown of the economy, with inflation raising prices 335 percent last year, was reflected in announcements by the private meatpackers that beef exports were being suspended and by the fruit packers of the Rio Negro Valley that they would not harvest apples and pears, which usually earn $100 million in exports each year.

The beef and fruit companies said they could not make money without an increase of 100 percent in the exchange rate for these products because costs have soared since a 70 percent devaluation of the peso early this month.

Tens of thousands of industrial workers are either on strike or have cut production by 50 to 80 percent in automotive and metal-processing factories through work stoppages and assemblies.

Even tax collections, which the Government needs desperately to meet payrolls, have been crippled by a strike of internal revenue workers demanding higher pay.

The fiscal debate was conceded by Emilio Mondelli, Mrs. Peron's fifth Minister of the Economy, who said recently that only 5 percent of the Government's spending was being paid from tax revenues. The major source of public funds has been from the printing of new money.

The depreciation of the Argentine peso, which has been compared to the inflation in Germany in the early 1920's, has destroyed much of the working-class support for the Peronist Government under Mrs. Peron.

A group of metalworkers from factories in Morón, an industrial suburb of Buenos Aires, discussed the situation outside their union headquarters today with dismay and anger.

"Do you think that a family man can live today with a salary of 7,000 pesos a month?" asked a man in a home-knit sweater. A salary of 7,000 pesos is equivalent to about $25 at the current free rate of exchange.

"I have three children and the cost of notebooks, pencils, and the white smock they wear to school has gone up 10 times since last year," he said. "We don't have money to buy food after the 15th of the month."

Military Analysts Consider the Deterrence Options the U.S. Has Against Cuba

By DREW MIDDLETON
Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's warnings to Cuba against further international military adventures have raised the question of what the United States could actually do to deter such actions.

The United States, by the United States could lead, sooner or later, to a Soviet-American confrontation.

Some sources also speculated that one immediate and unwelcome consequence of the Secretary's warnings might be an expansion of the Soviet naval presence in Cuba and the Caribbean generally.

Since October 1970 the Soviet Union has deployed submarines and surface warships to Cienfuegos in Cuba at regular intervals. These visiting ships have included diesel-powered ballistic missile submarines. That same autumn Mr. Kissinger said that "the Soviet Union can be under no doubt that we would view the establishment of a strategic base in the Caribbean with the utmost seriousness."

Military sources considering the hypothetical American response to a new Cuban intervention abroad point out that the situation is far more complex than that prevailing during the Cuban missile crisis in 1962.

In the intervening years, they said, Soviet naval power has expanded and that of the United States has contracted.

Equally important, they emphasized, the Soviet Union has built a fleet of air transports, some of which, IL-62's, have been lent to Cuba for ferrying troops to Angola.

A naval blockade, therefore, would be far more difficult to enforce and even more risky than that imposed by the Kennedy Administration. An effective blockade, the sources pointed out, would have to halt air as well as sea transport.

If Cuban or Soviet aircraft and ships defied American orders to halt, the sources said, the obvious next step would be to fire warning shots. If these failed to halt the carrier, according to blockade procedure, the next shots would be aimed at the ship.

Although a blockade appears to be the most obvious military option available to the United States, some sources believed that a demonstration of new accuracy and lethality of American weapons might reinforce Mr. Kissinger's warnings.

Such a demonstration might take the form of sinking an American hulk off the Cuban coast, using one of the newly developed Remotely Piloted Munitions such as the GBU-15.

Laser and other guidance systems in this weapon can pound a target many miles away. The demonstration, some sources thought, might persuade Cuba that the United States had the ability to do evident risks in trying to bluff with an empty gun because "sooner or later the other fellow realizes it isn't loaded."

Further down the list of options are all-out measures such as the use of airborne forces against Cuba or to support forces fighting the Cubans in Africa or elsewhere.

From the military's point of view any American response to new Cuban moves would invite the risks of confrontation with the Soviet Union.

The same sources were equally concerned over the effects upon the third world and upon America's allies in Europe if they see that warnings, such as Mr. Kissinger's are only words unlikely to be supported by deeds.

There are, as one source said, "evident risks in trying to bluff with an empty gun because 'sooner or later the other fellow realizes it isn't loaded.'"

Italy Issues 2 More Warrants For Arrest in Lockheed Affair

ROME, March 23—A magistrate investigating the Lockheed scandal today issued more warrant for the arrest of high-level employees of a company that allegedly accepted and channeled funds from the aircraft company to favor the sale of planes in Italy.

The employees, Victor Max Melca, president of the Ikaria Company, based in Liechtenstein, and Luigi Olivetti, a member of the board of the same company, are said to be living in Switzerland.

The two new warrants, which bring the total to eight, were signed less than a day after a Rome lawyer, Antonio Lefebvre d'Ovidio, and a retired Italian air force general, Duilio Fanali, were arrested on charges of corruption in connection with the Lockheed scandal. They were taken to jail last night after the police had apprehended them at their Rome homes.

Antonio Lefebvre d'Ovidio's brother, Ovidio Lefebvre d'Ovidio, is one of four other persons for whom arrest warrants have been issued. All but one of these are believed to have left Italy. The fourth, Vittorio Antocelli, was arrested on Feb. 20.

General Fanali was chief of staff of the Italian air force from 1968 to 1971, the period during which Italy brought 14 Hercules transport planes from Lockheed.

Late today, a Rome magistrate, Dario Martella, altered the charges against General Fanali from corruption to extortion by a public official.

According to the new charge, the other persons arrested became accomplices to General Fanali.

The new charges imply that Lockheed may have been forced by Italian officials or their representatives to pay to favor the sale of their airplanes to Italy, rather than simply have offered

U.S. and Japan in Accord

WASHINGTON, March 23 (Reuters) — The United States and Japan today signed an agreement under which information will be provided to Japanese investigators about alleged Lockheed payments to Japanese officials.

The pact was signed by Richard Thornberry, Assistant Attorney General and head of the Justice Department's Criminal Division, and Yasuyoshi Shioo, Japanese Deputy Justice Minister.

Details of the agreement were not disclosed, but it was understood to contain United States-imposed guarantees that names of Japanese officials alleged to have accepted bribes to promote Lockheed aircraft sales would not be made public unless the Japanese government brought criminal charges against them.

The agreement follows a series of daily meetings between United States officials and a Japanese delegation that arrived last week to discuss the issue.

The United States was represented at the meeting by officials from the State Department, the Securities and Exchange Commission as well as the Justice Department.

In Congress, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was scheduled to meet today but postponed its session until next week. It intends to discuss handing over material on the Lockheed affair requested by the Justice Department.

claim their loyalty to "proletarian internationalism," which Moscow has interpreted as meaning above all support for the Soviet Union. The new party line also proclaims support for civil liberties and has dropped "dictatorship of the proletariat" as one of its tenets.

The French Communist leader, George Marchais, made a point of refusing to attend the Soviet party's recent 25th congress to show his distance from Moscow, and sent a deputy official at the four stations.

who arranged the sale of advertising time were unavailable, but other staff members said that there was certainly an agreement among them before the schedule was accepted and that presumably the French Government was consulted.

Other parts of the Communists' campaign include the projected sale of at least a million copies of the book based on its new program, a 10-day organization of special meetings to a thousand factories organized by the party's 8,000 industrial cells, a three-month door-to-door recruitment and propaganda campaign throughout France by the party's 15,000 local and rural cells, public meetings involving outsiders to be organized by all 23,000 cells, a hundred large-scale meetings, and additional posters.

Rene Piquet, secretary of the party's Central Committee, said that the goal of the recruitment effort was to win 100,000 new members. The party now claims a membership of 500,000.

White Rhodesia Leader Rejects British Plan for Majority Rule

tomorrow to work out a new strategy for ending white rule in Rhodesia.

Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia, Samora Machel of Mozambique, Julius Nyerere of Tanzania and Sir Seretse Khama of Botswana are expected to be joined by the Rhodesian nationalist leaders, Mr. Nkomo and Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

The Presidents are expected to try to resolve a conflict between Mr. Nkomo and Bishop Muzorewa, who heads the external faction of the African National Council.

A continuing split would hinder the guerrilla war against the white Rhodesians widely predicted since the Salisbury talks collapsed.

Even before Mr. Smith's statement today, Rhodesia's whites were reacting strongly against Britain's proposals.

The British "knew full well that a hand-over in 18 months to two years would result in chaos," said Tim Gibbs, leader of the liberal-leaning, all-white Rhodesia Party.

Des Frost, head of the ruling Rhodesian Front Party, forecast "bloody upsurge" within the party if Mr. Smith agreed to the terms.

The only black reaction came from Mr. Nkomo, who said he thought the two-year period was too long and added:

"I had been expecting a more positive move from the British Government."

Security forces announced today that eight people were killed in Rhodesia's guerrilla war in the last four days. One was an African farmer whose head was blown off by a stick of gelignite tied to his neck by guerrillas.

Two of the dead were guerrillas killed by troops in the eastern border area close to Mozambique, a communique said.

Kenya Looks to Soviet NAIR obi, Kenya, March 23 (AP)—In an apparent foreign policy shift Kenya said today that Soviet and Cuban aid would be welcome in the struggle to eliminate white minority governments in Rhodesia and South Africa.

Foreign ministr Munyua Wajiyaki said on his return from a European tour that "military assistance should be sought from any willing power."

He said southern Africa cared less about possible Communist expansion than about obtaining Soviet and Cuban help against racists.

Kenya maintains antileft domestic policies and, although nominally nonaligned in foreign relations, in practice has leaned toward the West.

Cuban Aid Weighed STOCKHOLM, March 23 (UPI)—Bishop Abel Muzorewa, a leader of the African National Council, said in a Swedish television interview that black Rhodesians might ask for Cuban military intervention in their fight for independence.

Bonn's Drive Against Spies From the East Also Nets the Innocent

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

BOON, March 23 — Walter Böhm was the chief of a labor union office in Bonn, a respected member of the suburban community of Buschhofen, and a grateful refugee from East German Communism — until Nov. 11, 1974.

He was arrested that day on charges of being a Communist spy, and public interest in his case was intense. A wave of concern about East German agents had begun the previous spring, when the discovery of the spy Günter Guillaume on Willy Brandt's staff forced the Chancellor to resign.

According to American and West German intelligence officers, there are thousands of East German agents in this country. Estimates range all the way to 10,000, and one is arrested almost every week.

The arrests stir up the popular anti-Communism that is always latent here. They also encourage calls for more vigilance against the enemies of democracy in a country that has known democracy for less than 50 years of its history.

Sometimes an innocent victim gets caught in the still imperfect machinery.

"Your Life Comes to an End" "Your whole life comes to an end," Mr. Böhm remembered.

His employer, the Labor Union Federation chief, Heinz Oskar Vetter, appeared on national television that night and described Mr. Böhm as "a systematic agent" of East Germany.

In Mr. Vetter's interview and in the screaming headlines of most of the next day's newspapers, there was little indication of doubt that Mr. Böhm was a spy or that he would be convicted of the charges against him.

He was born 57 years ago in what is now East Germany and in 1958, like millions of people before the Berlin Wall was built in 1961, he fled to West Germany. His work as a secret anti-Communist labor union activist in the East began to get dangerous, he says, and he found a position with the union here in 1962, much as Mr. Guillaume had done before him.

"I knew Guillaume," Mr. Böhm said, "and I had worked with him in the Chancellor's Office. He was responsible for labor union matters, so he was the man I had to deal with."

The Guilloumes, Günter and his wife, Christel, were convicted of espionage last December and sentenced to 13 and 8 years' imprisonment.

After his arrest, Mr. Böhm was taken before a judge in Karlsruhe to plead to the spying charges.

"The secret service said they

saw me go into a church without crossing myself," he remembers, "as though I were going in to conceal a secret meeting. And they said I had gone to the Spandau cemetery in West Berlin, and had started to run when I got inside the gate. They had been watching every move I made for three months."

The examining magistrate was not convinced that there were grounds to keep Mr. Böhm and his wife, Irmgard, in jail pending indictment. They were allowed to return home to Buschhofen the next day, while the investigation went on.

"The police had seized all our files and also all our money," he said, "so when we got home to the apartment we didn't have a penny left. But neighbors came to the rescue."

"They were puzzled, of course," Mr. Böhm recalls, "but they collected pocket money for us and they brought us food. They were very kind."

3 Trips to East Germany

The Böhm's teen-age son and daughter were kept out of school for four days, but as the investigation dragged on they were allowed to return. Their father says they too, were treated kindly by their peers.

Meanwhile he had to submit to a series of investigations and interrogations by the Federal Criminal Office, which continued probing until January of last year.

"They wanted to know why I had made three trips to East Germany," he said, "and I convinced them it was to visit my mother and father in Zittau. They are both too old to travel."

The mysterious run in the cemetery was because it was close to closing time when he arrived at the gate. One by one, the elements of the Government's case began to collapse. The Labor Union Federation then restored Mr. Böhm's $370-a-week salary but not his job.

"I didn't even entertain an executive in Bonn and didn't see why I should be forced to support his organization that would treat me the way they did," Mr. Böhm said — not even after last April 14, when the charges against him were dropped. The statement from the Federal Prosecutor's Office in Karlsruhe was very short. It said: "The suspicion of secret espionage activity in the case has been eliminated, and the charges against Mr. Böhm and his wife have been dropped." So he began looking for a job. "People were very repressed," he says. "They would say they'd be willing to hire me but wanted no problems from the labor unions." And, he adds, "I had been the Labor Union... a subordinate position... cost him $6,000... justice in a democracy was... vindicated, but there were... human disappointments, in... people like labor union leaders... who are expected to make... democracy work." Finally, last January, Mr. Böhm found a job at no loss... representing the West German European Movement in a tiny office above... and when they do a double... "It's ironic... West German spy... but from the... in 1958 — but... cause of European unity, and

ENVOYS REMARKS ANGER MEXICANS

American Termed Political System 'Monarchical'

Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, March 23—A casual remark by the United States ambassador to Mexico suggesting that this country's political system is "monarchical" has provoked a wave of official indignation and sparked demands in leftist circles that he be declared persona non grata.

President Luis Echeverría Álvarez ordered the Foreign Ministry to obtain the text of the comments "and take appropriate action," while both the president of the ruling party, Porfirio Muñoz Ledo, and the party's candidate for the Presidential elections, José López Portillo, denounced attempts to "destabilize" Mexico.

Ambassador Joseph John Jova made the remarks on Thursday at a symposium on United States-Mexican relations organized by the State Department at American University in Washington. A correspondent for the Mexican newspaper Excelsior was at the meeting and reported the remarks.

Comment About a 'Court'

According to the report, which has not been challenged by the United States Embassy, Mr. Jova said Mexico's political system is "one of monarchical succession — no matter how democratic, it is monarchical." He also reportedly said President Echeverría "travels with his court" during working trips throughout the provinces.

Mexico's ambassador to Washington, José Juan de Ollague, who also attended the opening session of the symposium, told the Mexican reporter that "I have the impression that this was an unfortunate paraphrase rather than a judgment of our system."

Nevertheless, there was an immediate reaction in Mexican political circles, with public statements of indignation and private speculation as to why Ambassador Jova should have made such a comment.

"I wouldn't say Mexico had a monarchical system," one well-known politician said jokingly. "I think it's more imperial or perhaps theocratic. But who would be so stupid to say so publicly?"

More than anything, though, the reaction to the remarks reflects Mexico's deep sensitivity both to criticism of its political system, in which one party has been in power without interruption for 46 years, and to hints of interference in its internal affairs from abroad, particularly from the United States.

Miami Beach May Raze Blighted Area of Elderly

By PAUL GOLDBERGER
Special to The New York Times

MIAMI BEACH—South Beach, which is what the neighborhood at the southern tip of this resort city is called, could be a hundred miles from the Miami Beach of song and story. It is quiet and tranquil; it has a real beach instead of a series of swimming pools jutting out into the ocean; its buildings are almost plain, white-washed apartment houses two or three floors high.

The New York Times/March 24, 1976

As residents, however, are largely old, and they live on fixed incomes that generally classify them as poor. South Beach is thus thought of by many residents of the other sections of Miami Beach as a slum, and for over a decade they have been arguing about what to do with it.

During that time Miami Beach itself has turned from being one of the nation's premier resorts to a city that, in the minds of many Northerners, is on the decline, and this has made local businessmen feel an even greater sense of urgency about what is known around here as the "South Beach problem."

Now there is an answer in the works—a major urban renewal scheme that, to some critics, harks back to the bulldoze-and-rebuild days of the 1950's and to supporters is the only way the city has to get on its feet again.

South Beach was declared a "blighted area" by the city last year, and plans are afoot to raze significant sections of the area, build a marina and other tourist facilities and create in the old quarter "something to change the image of Miami Beach as a place of old people, something to bring the other people back," according to Stephen Muss, a major Miami Beach builder and a member of the Miami Beach Redevelopment Authority, which was created just last month to oversee the project.

As in most planning situations, the process Miami Beach is going through is as political as it is architectural, and as a case history, it reveals the changes that have come to the planning process in the last few years.

The major political factor in the South Beach situation are the elderly residents, who have earned considerable influence in recent years. As a group, they are not too happy about the idea of redevelopment. As one elderly resident told a reporter recently, "They've been trying to sell the old people a bill of goods—they just want to push us away."

Max Serchuk, head of the Dade County Senior Citizens Council, was appointed to the Miami Beach Ad Hoc Redevelopment Committee, a citizens group that preceded the more formal redevelopment authority. Mr. Serchuk voted against turning the committee into a legal authority, and when that did happen and most of the committee became the board of the authority, he was not invited to join them.

"There is a lot of fear among these people—we have been getting a half-dozen calls a day asking when the bulldozers are coming," said Steve Siskind, a San Francisco planner who was hired last December to advise the redevelopment authority. "But we are convinced we can win community support, and we are determined that the project have a balance between development and preservation."

South Beach is a point of land, surrounded on three sides by water. It is the best goldmine site on the East coast, says Jim McDonnell, a security consultant and chairman of the redevelopment authority—and it is the neighborhood in which the city's growth began.

Like many old neighborhoods, it was abandoned by the wealthy for newer sections. But South Beach was taken over not by the younger poor, as in Northern cities, but by retirees. Its decline was economic, since tourism, Miami Beach's major industry, moved uptown to the grander, grander hotels, but it was not really social, because South Beach has remained fairly cohesive as a community, with active retail areas and lively street life.

But South Beach did create a stigma of genteel, elderly poverty that, while not so serious as the problems of crime and unemployment afflicting Northern cities, clearly threatened Miami Beach's economic base, tourism.

So the city was faced with a dilemma: Could it sacrifice a neighborhood on the gamble that it would assist the greater whole? The decision has been a cautious yes, buttressed by the expectation that the elderly will be a problem of limited duration, since their numbers are not increasing these days.

Moreover, the city has been hoping that extensive renewal in South Beach will have a spillover effect in the blocks to the north, an attractive area of splendid Art Deco hotels and apartment houses that provides a transition between South Beach and the Miami Beach palaces like the Fontainebleau and the Doral further north.

This intermediate area—despite one of the most remarkable concentrations of Art Deco architecture in the country—is in less than healthy shape itself. It, too, is populated largely by the elderly, although few of the residents in this area are as poor as those of South Beach. It is the city's hope, in fact, that the intermediate area, since it is similar in cultural makeup to South Beach, can absorb most of the displaced South Beach residents.

Before choosing as its planners Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons, a firm whose work includes Ghirardelli Square in San Francisco, Miami Beach studied 62 proposals for the redevelopment area from firms around the country. The proposals ranged from suggestions that the entire area be cleared and monumental towers be erected, to arguments in favor of making neighborhood stabilization the crux of the plan.

Under the guidance of Mr. Siskind, who had been a consultant associated with Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons's plan but who later withdrew and convinced the city to hire him as its own adviser, the proposals were narrowed down to a handful. Among the planners in serious contention were Angelou Demetriou of Washington, D.C., who in Mr. Siskind's words "wanted to come in and impose his forms on the city," and the firm of Venturi and Rauch of Philadelphia, which argued in its proposal that "considerable demolition would be a great mistake" and suggested instead creation of a preservation district aimed at increasing appreciation of the area's Art Deco hotels. The city ultimately chose Wurster, Bernardi and Emmons, on the basis of what the redevelopment committee saw as the firm's ability "to be halfway between the Venturi-and-Rauch and Demetriou approaches," Mr. Siskind said.

Mrs. Cecil Sprager, a widow, at her home on Third Street in the South Beach section of Miami Beach. She and her family have lived in the house for the last 25 years.

"We thought they understood the scale of the way people relate to a city, and yet also the need we had to get something new," Mr. Siskind said. But the specifics of the South Beach plan are only now being drawn up, and so it is impossible to say at this point which tack Miami Beach will take—only that the city seems, so far, to have made a conscious effort to appease all parties concerned.

The members of the new redevelopment authority talk with equal enthusiasm about the need to use South Beach to give the city a new image of spectacular design and the need to protect much of what exists and not to level the existing community. The politics of compromise, therefore, may become a tool of current planning, much as the bulldozer was of the appeal to social priorities in the 1950's.

"South Beach has a character," says Mr. Siskind. "But the question a new plan must face is, is that character retrievable? So far, we've been trying to keep an open mind."

iny on Dr. King Death
Is No Plot or U.S. Role

By JOHN M. CREWDSON
Special to The New York Times

ATON, March 23—The Department of Justice, after a four-day review of Federal records, has found no evidence of a conspiracy in the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. in Memphis in 1968, according to Justice officials. The review, however, is not intended to resolve the assassination, but to determine if the government should prosecute anyone for the crime.

Justice Attorney General Ramsey Clark said the review of files compiled by the Justice Department since the assassination in Memphis in 1968, is not intended to resolve the assassination, but to determine if the government should prosecute anyone for the crime.

Mr. Ray is now seeking a new trial, and his case is before the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Cincinnati. If his appeal is granted, his lawyers say, he will attempt to show only that he was coerced into admitting his guilt and will not help identify the "real" assassin.

Mr. Ray admits to having been in Memphis on April 4, 1968, the day that Dr. King was killed by a high-powered rifle bullet fired from a rooming house near his hotel. But the prisoner has since told a tangled and sometimes contradictory story that makes him out to be a pawn in a larger plot to murder Dr. King.

Back Fight Against Ouster

By PETER KIHSS

Ensign, who is an administrative assistant fleet public affairs officer, spoke about the case while in New York City on Tuesday.

Ensign Berg, 34, a civilian Navy teacher, whom he met in the Naval Academy, where Mr. Gibson had special assignments, directing musical activities.

Both said they had been living together in a homosexual relationship. They have also formed a business partnership to write and illustrate books and other works for publication.

Ensign Berg, still on active duty at Norfolk, said that the recommendation for his "discharge under conditions less than honorable" after a hearing last Jan. 19-28 had been endorsed by the commanding admiral of the Sixth Naval District in Charleston, S.C., this month. It is now before the Bureau of Personnel.

The ensign contends that his ouster would be unconstitutional, on an "arbitrary and capricious" premise relating homosexuality to incompetence, while denying due process, equal protection and right to privacy guarantees.

Mr. Gibson, who holds a master's degree from Princeton Theological Seminary, was a teacher at Annapolis before joining the fleet last June as a civil service teacher in a new Army-paid program the Navy was trying out on ships. He and Ensign Berg had an apartment together in Gaeta, Italy.

Last July 22, both were separately confronted by Navy intelligence agents who Ensign Berg said had seized correspondence in their apartment containing "terms of endearment."

He said his "moral conviction," based on his Presbyterian family background and reinforced by the Academy's honor code, led him to acknowledge homosexual acts with three civilian men in the last seven years as well as heterosexual acts.

sons it described as "active shoplifters." The flyer noted that the persons had been either arrested in 1971 or 1972 or "have been active in various criminal fields" in shopping areas.

One of the persons on the list was a newspaper photographer, Edward Charles Davis 3d, who was arrested on a shoplifting charge in June 1971. The charge was never prosecuted and was dismissed in the Louisville Police Court a few days after the flyer was sent out.

Mr. Davis sued in Federal court against the policemen responsible for the flyer, citing the Reconstruction era civil rights law that permits suits in Federal court based on alleged violations of constitutional rights.

He contended that the policemen with their flyer had violated his constitutional right to privacy, his right to be presumed innocent and his right not to be branded a criminal without having first had an opportunity to be heard.

Technically, what the Court majority did today was state that these contentions are not actionable under the Federal civil rights law.

rector of the Opinion Research Center, which is part of the University of Chicago, "for a stand against artificial contraception." Theologians and the church authorities are expected to debate the survey's reports both on methodological and philosophical grounds.

Archbishop Joseph L. Bernardin, President of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, called the study "valuable and important" as a source of data, but cautioned the church that "Catholic truth is not determined by sociological data or analysis." Archbishop Bernardin said "Humanae Vitae" contains the authentic teaching of the church concerning human sexuality and the morality of contraception.

In January, the Vatican's latest pronouncement on sexual-ity condemned premarital sex, masturbation and homosexuality and reaffirmed the church's stand against artificial contraception.

This stand has caused a massive defection from Catholic institutions and in personal religious behavior, interrupting a wave of church programs, according to the report.

The survey portrays the Catholic community as highly receptive to church reforms initiated by the Second Vatican Council. But it says that the salutary effects of the Council have been seriously undercut by the birth control ruling. The encyclical "seriously impaired the credibility and authority of the papacy, leading to sharp decline in mass attendance and a sharp increase in apostasy in the years immediately after the encyclical," the survey said.

The survey found a drop in attendance at weekly mass from 76 percent of those interviewed in 1963 to 60 percent in the new survey. There was a reduction from 72 to 60 percent in those who pray daily, 37 to 17 in those who attend monthly confession and 68 to 50 in those who would "very much" like to see a son enter the priesthood.

As an indication of the loss of papal authority, the report says that 10 years ago 70 percent agreed that it was "certainly true" that Jesus invested the church's leadership in the pope. In the new survey, 37 percent agree with the pope's infallible pronouncements on faith and morals.

The researchers found a drop in attendance at weekly mass from 76 percent of those interviewed in 1963 to 60 percent in the new survey. There was a reduction from 72 to 60 percent in those who pray daily, 37 to 17 in those who attend monthly confession and 68 to 50 in those who would "very much" like to see a son enter the priesthood.

There was a decline of one-third in the indexes of religious devotion, the report concludes. The survey was conducted from March 1, 1974, to June 6, 1974. A team of 40 researchers completed 927 in-person interviews, which averaged 84 minutes in length. Fifty-seven percent of those interviewed were women, 86 percent were white and 81 percent were between the ages of 20 and 59 years.

The research team, Father Greeley, William Cready and Kathleen reported that the Catholic strongly backed schools.

Although enrollment in parochial schools has dwined by a half million since a survey found 90 percent of the people questioned said that they would support their giving to ucision is frightening people," the dissenter is not difficult, the report said, to conceive of a department, dissatisfied, what it perceives to be dilatory nature or inefficiency of the judicial dealing with criminals, publishing periodicals, or other "incidents."

The dissent, calling for a denigration of the Bill of Rights, is the majority of tolerant, arbitrary and capricious conduct branding an individual as a criminal" with the process established for determining innocence.

the jury after she refused to answer questions on the ground that her answers might tend to incriminate her.
Also, it has become apparent that Miss Hearst's defense followed almost exactly the line developed in interviews with Dr. Louis Jolyon West, a psychiatrist and director of the neuropsychiatric clinic at the University of California at Los Angeles.
F. Lee Bailey, Miss Hearst's chief attorney, said to the jury that she had first told her story to Dr. West, one of three psychiatrists named by Judge Carter to give opinions on her competency to stand trial.
With the two others, and him also Dr. Margaret Thaler Singer of the University of California, Berkeley, Dr. West told Judge Carter that Miss Hearst was competent to stand trial.

Judge Got 'Long' Report
Then Dr. West and Dr. Singer continued to see Miss Hearst and ended up writing a report about her that Judge Carter later described in court as "very long—long enough to be both right and wrong."
Mr. Bailey said at a recess in the trial one day that he had never heard of Dr. West until "he called me one day to say that he had been appointed by the court and that the defendant wouldn't talk to

Mr. West, Mr. Bailey said, had told him that Miss Hearst had said that her previous attorney, Terence Hallinan of San Francisco, had told her not to talk with court-appointed psychiatrists. Mr. Bailey said he had told Dr. West to go ahead, and had sent word to Miss Hearst to cooperate.
Dr. West's report, to which Dr. Singer contributed, is not a public document. A source familiar with it said that the defense had followed the line put down in it by asserting that Miss Hearst had been forced by threat and mistreatment to help rob the Sunset branch of the Hibernia Bank. Miss Hearst was put on the stand to tell her story, and then Dr. West, with two other psychiatrists, testified as expert witnesses. They said that, in their opinion, Miss Hearst was telling the truth and that she had been coerced.

Members of the jury said later that they had rejected the doctor's opinions because they were at variance with other evidence that the jurors had chosen to accept. The jurors also said they had not believed Miss Hearst's assertions about coercion.
After the trial Mr. Bailey said that in his view the strongest, most damaging evidence against Miss Hearst had been her refusal to answer questions about the period from September 1974 to September 1975 when she was a fugitive.
A source familiar with Dr. West's account of what Miss Hearst had told him said that she had "blanked out" that year in those talks, also.
From all this, it seemed plain that the defense had offered Miss Hearst as a witness knowing that she would seek Fifth Amendment protection to keep from talking about a year of her life, but had gone ahead with the hope—a vain one, as it turned out—that Judge Carter would not require her to let the jury know of her position.

Study Finds City Pensions Have Sufficient Funding

By GLENN FOWLER

The city's multibillion-dollar pension funds, covering more than 400,000 municipal employees and retirees, are not underfunded, according to a six-month study by a task force composed primarily of businessmen.

In a report which has not yet been made public, to Mayor Beame's Management Advisory Board, the task force recommended that updated actuarial assumptions replace those used in the past, which have led to widespread reports that the city pension funds were being drained to a dangerous degree.

The report said that, in fact, the city would incur an "unfunded accrued liability" of $200-million in its five pension funds in the fiscal year beginning next July 1. However, the task force added:

"It should be emphasized that the existence of unfunded accrued liability does not necessarily mean that the plan is underfunded."

As explained by members of the task force and city actuaries, the liability is a shifting factor that cannot be forecast. Every time wages are increased, for example, pensions automatically go up, wiping out the assumptions on which the pension costs had previously been based.

The gap between the $1.22 billion projected by the city as its pension costs in the 1976-77 fiscal year and the $1.43 billion recommended by the task force could be closed, it is presumed, by a carefully balanced three-year financial plan that the city hopes will extricate it from its fiscal predicament.

Mayor Beame declined comment on the report last night, saying he had not yet received it. Deputy Mayor Kenneth S. Axelson, the fiscal expert who is Mr. Beame's top adviser in such matters, was familiar with the task force's work, and he said it had produced a "gratifying" conclusion that "there is no cause for alarm about underfunding."

Mr. Axelson pointed out that the city would begin receiving higher pension contributions from its employees beginning April 1, owing to a rescindment of the "increased take-home pay" provision that for more than a decade has required the city to pick up a substantial portion of employee pension contributions.

This, together with elimination of city payments to certain union annuity funds, will make up almost the entire $200-million difference between the city's planned pension payments and the level recommended by the task force.

The pension study, commissioned last fall by the advisory board headed by Richard R. Shinn, Chairman of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, investigated the actuarial soundness of five city funds: the New York City Employees Retirement System, the Teachers Retirement System, the Police Pension Fund, the Fire Department Pension Fund and the Board of Education Retirement System.

The task force report noted that the ratio of assets to liabilities of the city's pension funds was 43 percent. This compares with a much lower ratio of 21 percent for pension funds covering Federal employees. Private industry pension funds vary widely in asset-to-liability ratio but, Mr. Axelson said, the city's ratio is "right about the middle" of the nationwide average.

The complex question of pension funding has been made even more difficult in the city's case by a lack of up-to-date information. The task force recommended that records be updated and that computers be used to calculate a more precise level of liability.

GOVERNOR ASSAILS SOME BUDGET CUTS

with the prosecutor, Mr. Hecht said that the justification for Mr. Hynes' had presented for the auditing program had been "very bedpful" and that the Legislature would decide "strictly on the merits" whether to restore the funds early next week.

Judging from the conciliatory tone adopted by both Assemblyman Hecht and Mr. Hynes, it seemed likely that the money would be restored. Mr. Hynes in effect apologized for not having consulted with the Legislature sooner on his budget request and for his earlier implication that the deletion had been a precipitous act by a legislative leadership resentful of his investigation, which involves a number of legislators.

"If that's what's in the public mind, I hope it's erased," he said. "I've spoken to enough legislators over the last few days to conclude that this was more than a breakdown in communication. They had a lot of things to worry about, and this just fell between the cracks."

Earlier Action Recalled

Mr. Hynes said he had suggested to the budget division of the Governor's office some time ago that he make his case directly to the Legislature, but had been discouraged by a budget official who said such an approach would be "inappropriate."

"I'm a stranger to this process, and if I got that advice again, I wouldn't follow it," he said, turning to Mr. Hecht with a smile.

Warren M. Anderson, Republican of Bioghamton and the Senate majority leader, has said that he would consider restoring the funds as long as the 90 auditors are placed in the Health Department's office. Mr. Hynes said today that the auditors were in fact planned to comprise a self-contained unit within the Health Department:

a plan that does not conflict with Senator Anderson's wishes.

Governor Carey's remarks about the budget this morning appeared to represent a change in his public posture toward the document with which the state now hopes to attract investors for its spring borrowing needs.

The Governor's office until now had sought to put the best public face on the budget and only in private comments did Mr. Carey's aides voice fears that some of the program cuts assigned to them. The goal was to avoid saying anything that might shake the investment community's confidence that the budget was actually balanced.

The Governor has no power to restore legislative cuts in his budget request, so Mr. Carey is trying a different approach to soften the impact of the cuts. His office is drafting legislation that would give department heads broad powers to shift funds from one program to another and to set their own budget priorities regardless of the specific directives contained in the budget, the Legislature passed.

Legislative aides said, however, that resentment was so great over what they termed Mr. Carey's failure to understand the Legislature's point of view in the budget negotiations that the chances of such a bill becoming law were remote.

Legislators and their aides expressed considerable annoyance over Mr. Carey's remarks today. "He's trying to make us look like the bad guys," one said. "What happened to the budget happened because of him, not in spite of him."

$6.4 Billion Foreign Aid Bill Is Voted by Senate, 52-31

WASHINGTON, March 23 (AP)—The Senate passed a $6.4-billion foreign aid appropriation bill for the 15 months of the fiscal year ending Sept. 30. The 52-31 vote sent the measure to a conference with the House, which approved a $5.4 billion total on March 8.

The bill provides funds for economic and military assistance and military credit sales. The Administration asked $6.3 billion.

About $4 billion in the Senate bill is for assistance to Middle East countries in support of the Israel-Egypt disengagement agreement in Sinai last September.

Israel is to receive the largest share, totaling $2.8 billion, including $500 million for the Sept. 30 transitional quarter that the Ford Administration did not request.

Recital: By Ann Schein

Pianist Displays Technical Aplomb in Bedazzlements of Carter Sonata

By DONAL HENAHAN

Any piano recital that embraces both Carter's Piano Sonata and Gottschalk's "Union, Paraphrase de Concert" demonstrates at very least that the performer's musical interests are manifold. Ann Schein, who made her Carnegie Hall debut in 1962 but who has been absent from the concert scene for several seasons, showed on Monday evening a particular affinity for the early (1945-46) Carter piece and had the technical aplomb to handle its perpetual-motion runs, bravura octaves and other bedazzlements, as well as the sensitivity to discover elegant overtones in the endante sections.

Some of these objections could also be lodged against Rachmaninoff's Prelude in D (Op. 23, No. 4) and the Etudes-Tableaux No. 6 and No. 7 of Op. 33, but Miss Schein's mastery of their technical difficulties, even on a small scale, called for admiration. The Gottschalk, noisily but not very imaginatively built on such things as the national anthem and "Yankee Doodle," ended the night with a Bicentennial thud. The pianist gave no hint that she found the work interesting or amusing, and as a result it sounded not only cheap but also boring.

Miss Schein is an invariably able player and at times a brilliant one, though in Carnegie Hall both her ideas and her tone production seemed small-scaled. Schubert's Sonata in A (Op. 120), one of his gentler creations, nevertheless needed more depth and breadth than Miss Schein brought to it. Her playing stayed on the surface of the keys so consistently that details were lost. The Schubert had its lovely moments, one coming at the end of the Andante, where the pianist's voicing of chords and adjustment of dynamics were exemplary. The opening theme of that movement, however, was phrased squarely and primly, and in the brisker pages there was too much self-consciously elegant, weakly inflected passagework. In a Chopin group, the Nocturne in E flat (Op. 55, No. 2) and the Scherzo No. 1 in B minor were cut to the measure of a more intimate hall. Much of the music fell into a sotto voce manner, relieved at times by an incongruous bluster. Miss Schein plainly was in command of the notes, but her fleet fingers could not get deeply enough into the keys, at the tempo she chose, to make the music's points.

Maria Muldaur Offers Songs In Varied Styles at Bottom Line

Maria Muldaur is a big star in pop music these days, but she hasn't always had it easy since her emergence a couple of years ago from her post-jazz band anonymity. Her peculiar little soprano with its sharp register break can sound a little in the manner of attempts at jazz singing sometimes fall short of their models, and her appearances in huge concerts—this observer once saw her at the 45,000-seat Roosevelt Stadium in Jersey City—dilute the charm she exerts close up. Miss Muldaur remains a club singer, and that was one of the reasons her appearance Monday night at the Bottom Line, the first night of a two-night run there, part of a tour to support her new album—was such an exhilarating success. Miss Muldaur positively beams with vibrancy on stage, and her warmth goes a long way toward excusing any shortcomings in her ambitious attempt to sing every sort of popular music that has been created in this country in this century. That may be overstating her range just a bit—there was no disco or heavy-metal rock or cabaret on Monday. But there was Appalachian folk music, bluegrass, modern country, rhythm and blues, blues, early rock, prewar pop, jazz from three decades, gospel, folk and contemporary ballads. Miss Muldaur doesn't handle all these styles with absolutely sovereign mastery. But she does them all pretty well, and the mere statement of affinities amounts to something valuable in itself. Not even to speak of the delightful variety and pacing it lends her sets. And she has a hand to follow her every turn. Danny Carter, who backed her jazz work on records and appeared with her last year at Avery Fisher Hall, wasn't on hand Monday. But with Amos Garrett and John Gilton on guitar and horns, Michael Finnigan on keyboards, Earl Palmer on drums and Michael Moore on bass, all stylistic bases were covered with the utmost deftness. And to cap it all, Paul Butterfield added some inspired harmonica licks at the late show, and Ellen Ksarny, Mr. Finnigan and Mr. Garrett joined Miss Muldaur on vocal harmonies that completely justified her touring show's nickname—The Sweet Harmony Revue. —The Sweet Harmony Revue. Customs Warns of Fraud In Fake Mayan Artifacts

By GRACE GLEUCK

Officials of the United States Customs Service warned yesterday of an art fraud scheme involving fake Mayan artifacts from Guatemala intended to produce $35 million. In giving details of the conspiracy said to include at least 12 individuals—the officials would provide no names and stressed that no arrests had been made.

The scheme was first uncovered by the Public Morals Division of the New York Police Department, looking into an underworld pornography ring. It involved the importation here from Guatemala of a number of fake stone stelae, or tablets, inscribed with "Mayan" carvings.

Declared 'Bric-a-brac' A 1973 treaty between the United States and 15 countries of Central America and South America provides that no cultural artifacts may be permitted United States entry without an export certificate from the country of origin.

Nevertheless, Mr. Grieco said, the conspirators' intention to sell the stones as genuine artifacts was indicated by a coded document found during the police investigation into the pornography ring. The document mentioned the existence of 1,000 such stones, presumably fabricated in Guatemala, to sell for $35,000 each.

Describing the police side of the investigation, Capt. Lawrence Hepburn, of the Public Morals Division, said that late

Pistons Down Knicks As Money, Lanier Star

By SAM GOLDAPER

The Detroit Pistons have a play they call "No. 12." Eric Money, the playmaker, made good use of it, especially in the second half last night and the payoff was a much-needed 122-116 victory over the Knicks at Madison Square Garden.

"It's a two-man play for the center and guard," said the 21-year-old Money. "It was designed for me and Bob Lanier and it sure worked tonight."

It sure did. Money, who should have been a senior at the University of Arizona, but left after his sophomore season for the lure of pro dollars, scored 25 points, 21 in the second half, and passed off for six assists. Lanier, the burly 6-foot-11-inch, 230-pound center, chipped in with 23 points.

The play brought out the best in Money's quickness and movement without the ball and Lanier's brute strength as he bulled his way inside or hit on short jumpers for his nine field goals.

The No. 12 play is a left-over from when Ray Scott coached the Pistons until his dismissal last Jan. 26.

"When I became the coach," said Herb Brown, "I put in an entire new offense, one designed to add quickness and more movement for the entire team, at first I didn't allow the No. 12 play to be used. It would bother me because the other three guys would just stand around and look at each other. That is no longer the case."

"Eric is growing up in the game. He got his chance to play when Kevin Porter was injured and the playing time has done wonders for him."

Munson Signs Yank Contract Put at $135,000

Still Nettled by Trade—Munson Looks Fit in Game

By JOSEPH DURSO

For little side shows like choosup games. Much of the attention was lavished on Bud Harrelson, the regular shortstop for nine years and Seaver's regular roommate on the road. Or rather it was lavished on Harrelson's right knee. He underwent surgery on it last May for the second time in seven years, played in only 34 games and missed 128. But today he played all five innings with no sign of trouble. His knee, to mix the metaphor, could be the Mets' Achilles heel.

The rest of the attention was devoted to Lolic, who pitched 14 summers for the Detroit Tigers before they traded him to New York for Rusty Staub. The chubbly left-hander, who won three games in the 1968 World Series, pitched two easy innings despite a home run to right-center by Torre, also 35 and an expatriate.

Later, Lolic conceded that he was still nettled by the trade, particularly by the lack of a warm farewell from the Detroit front office. "I like Seaver in New York, the best pitcher in town. I'm between the emotional attachments this spring," he said, sitting on the little porch at Higgins-Stengel Field. "I might just as well be wearing a Detroit uniform. My wife told me not to think or talk about it, but it bothers me, it makes me sad."

"I worked in that organization 17 years, 14 in the big leagues. The owner, John Fetzer, telephoned me a year ago and said, 'I want you to come back to the Mets.' I said, 'I'll be back if you want me.'"

Use of David baseball team was a bearded band of men sponsored by a religious sect whose base was in Benton Harbor, Mich. This was in the days of the Alexander Cartwright and Rollie Fingers. Reggie Jackson message a curve. If they prefer skinheads, they can stay home and watch Kojak.

Jack Orr is a reformed baseball writer who is getting to be a curmudgeon. Floating franchises like the Boston Milwaukee Atlanta Braves, the Philadelphia Kansas City Oakland A's, the New York San Francisco Giants and the Brooklyn Los Angeles Dodgers confuse him. Gimmicks like the designated hitter offend him. Pious statements about preserving "the game as we know it" move him to violence because when he goes to the park he sometimes has difficulty recognizing the game as he knew it. "I propose," he writes, "that all expansion and carpetbag clubs be told to go pack sand and form their own league. Meanwhile, there will be built a tidy group of teams representing Boston, Brooklyn, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis."

"In this new formation, the clubs would play each other 22 times a year, half at home, half away, 154 games. The club winning the most games would win the pennant and go into the World Series. We could call it the National League."

"We would tear down the lights and have only day games, starting at 1 P.M. The Star Spangled Banner would be played only on opening day and at the first game of the World Series. Fifty-five cents in the bleachers (I have a great name for the ballpark in Philadelphia: Baker Bowl). Teams would travel by train."

"The first rule to be thrown out is the one that has the player having to bring his glove to the bench between innings. One of my fondest memories is the picture of the shortstop going into the hole to throw out the hitter to end an inning and, in the same motion, whirling and scaling his glove to short left field."

"You are invited to be on the board of directors of this new league, which already has the approval of the National Recovery Act people."

Oscar Gamble of the Yankees before and after haircut

By MURRAY CHASS

Special to The New York Times

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla., March 23—Thurman Munson, a white towel draped around his sun-tanned neck, emerged from the rented trailer Gabe Paul uses as his office at Fort Lauderdale Stadium and wearily stooped into the driver's seat of Paul's rented gray Toyota. The catcher tossed the towel on the passenger seat and leaned back. He looked as if he had just solved baseball's labor dilemma, the Middle East problem and Britain's pound crisis, all in one sitting.

"I don't want to say anything at this time," the Yankee star said quietly today. "I want to sit back and think about what I've done. It's a big load off my mind. I want to relax. It's been on my mind a long time."

Hunter Highest Paid

Munson, one of the two players the Yankees could not afford to lose, had just voluntarily relinquished any chance he had of playing out his option and becoming a free agent at the end of this season. He had agreed to terms of a new contract.

Neither Munson nor Paul, the club's president, would discuss the terms, but there's no question that Munson became the sixth Yankee to reach the $100,000 plateau, joining Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, Bobby Murcer, Bob by Bonds and Calfish Hunter.

Hunter, the other player the Yankees could not afford to lose, earns $150,000 a season, which remains the top salary in Yankee history. Munson's new salary falls

Ban on Interstate OTB Urged

WASHINGTON, March 23

(AP) — Thoroughbred and harness horse owners, breeders and track operators urged Congress today to prohibit interstate off-track betting, contending the industry otherwise would be killed off.

Witnesses after testimony, including representatives of the Florida and Kentucky racing industry, told the House Transportation and Commerce subcommittee that permitting such betting would cause the sport to deteriorate to little more than a lottery on horse races, and without the sport of racing there can be no business of racing.

With fewer tracks operating, there would be no justification in breeding horses that have no place to race, and the breeding industry could not exist, said Dan Lasater, an owner and breeder who was the leading money-winner in 1975.

John Nerud, president of the Tartan Farm of Ocala, Fla., told the subcommittee that if interstate off-track betting was permitted, "we would need only two or three race tracks operating in America, with only 10 percent of the horses, jockeys, and valets that we now have. You are going to cripple 90 percent of the racing industry. "We just as soon will run mechanical horses on a screen and sell tickets on them."

The witnesses testified in favor of bills, introduced by Representative Fred Rooney, Democrat of Pennsylvania, chairman of the committee; Representative Bill Chappell, Democrat of Florida, and Representative Carl Perkins, Democrat of Kentucky.

The bills would prohibit states with legalized off-track betting from permitting wagering on races in another state.

State law currently limits New York OTB to wagers on no more than five out-of-state events each year. Connecticut and New York have entered into an agreement, however, whereby New York races will be available for betting in Connecticut parlors in return for a percentage of the Connecticut handle.

Paul Scriverne, head of New York's OTB, is scheduled to testify tomorrow in opposition to the legislation.

George Smathers representing the American Horse Council, a national association representing 2 million horsemen, said interstate pari-mutual racing would eliminate the smaller tracks because of economics.

"In their drive to obtain every available betting dollar, the interstate wagering operations will seek the best races throughout the country," he said. "They will enter into contracts with one or two of the better-known tracks in other states. The tracks within the states that offer interstate off-track wagering will be unable to compete with better quality racing programs."

"Attendance at these tracks will decline, purses will grow smaller, revenue will fall and, slowly but surely, the track will become unprofitable and close," he said.

"Soon the industry will be left with a very small number of tracks and with no place to run the fair or mediocre grade horses. Without an opportunity to turn a profit from these horses, breeders will stop producing."

Messersmith Takes Strike One

Andy Messersmith, the Los Angeles Dodgers' star pitcher who became a free agent recently, may not find it easy to get a team to meet his terms. The Cincinnati Reds said yesterday they had rejected a $1.5 million offer by his agent. The Reds said the proposal included a bonus and a four-year, no-cut contract. It came from Herb Osmond, Messersmith's agent, in a phone call from Los Angeles.

Austin finished the season with 811 points and a career mark of 2,158, topping the record set by Moses Malone when he was at Petersburg High in Virginia.

An Ill Wind Buffets 'Bubbles' And Poses Perils for Operators

It has happened before and the owners of such tennis centers consider such incidents hazards to the trade, although they give assurance that there is no danger to anyone. Although the experiment stimulated minority enrollment, it predated a deliberate Williams effort later in the decade to increase black and other minority presence and thus was not primarily designed for that purpose. Of the 358 students admitted within the program during the course of the 10-year study — unknown to either the students themselves or their teachers — a "remarkable" three-quarters of them graduated, a fact that tends to vindicate the whole 10 percent program. Their graduation rate of 70.9 percent for the classes from 1967 to 1973 was within 12 to 15 percentage points of the college's norm. There was also an upward pattern of performance during the Williams years, with 49 percent graduating in the bottom fifth of the class, compared with the 60 percent who began college in the bottom fifth.

STUDENTS SUPPORT DEFIANT PRINCIPAL

Queens Boycott Highlights Protest Over Suspension

By LEONARD BUDER

Students boycotted classes at Long Island City High School in Queens yesterday in support of their suspended principal, Dr. Howard L. Hurwitz. Dr. Hurwitz was suspended Monday by School Chancellor Irving Anker for refusing to readmit a student who, the principal said, had a record of serious misbehavior.

Dr. Howard L. Hurwitz in his office yesterday.

Many of the school's 3,000 students massed to the streets with placards reading, "No Hurwitz, No School," and "Down With Anker, Up With Hurwitz." Dozens of sympathetic parents stood guard outside the principal's office. Despite a directive from the Chancellor that Dr. Hurwitz should report to headquarters pending the outcome of the charges against him, the 60-year-old principal came to his day office yesterday and, he said, "They will have to carry me out piece by piece."

Dr. Hurwitz, who during his 10 years at Long Island City High School had earned a reputation for being a strict disciplinarian, declared: "I am not some kind of bum you put into the streets. All I did was refuse to accept a kid who terrified other students and teachers. I felt abused cruelly by a Chancellor who has known me 35 years and who did not even show me the consideration of speaking to me personally."

At Board of Education headquarters, a spokesman said that the Chancellor's office had asked the City Corporation Counsel to initiate proceedings to "resolve this matter. Presumably the city would seek a court injunction against those who are regarded as being illegally in the school building, such as Dr. Hurwitz and some of his supporters." In charging Dr. Hurwitz with insubordination and unbecoming conduct, Chancellor Anker said that the principal had improperly suspended and kept was scheduled in the immediate future. At an informal meeting Monday night, members said, the board authorized Mr. Giardino to convey to Stephen Berger, chief administrator of the Control Board, the "consensus" that he perceived within the board on how to consolidate the university in the face of severe cutbacks in city and state financial support.

Hostos be continued with their own identity within Bronx Community College, and there was substantial support for authorizing Evers to continue offering its nursing program on a four-year basis. On two items there was unanimous agreement that the Kibbee Plan should be modified. The board was said to have agreed to merge Richmond College with State Island Community College rather than eliminate it entirely. This would mean that it would still be possible to pursue four years of college in this growing borough.

The board, however, did not take up questions such as the particular locations in which the merged institution would operate. Board members also unanimously agreed to allow York College to continue for at least the next two or three years as a four-year institution, in part because of pressure from Jamaica, Queens, residents who said that it was important to their community. University officials have questioned whether, under more stringent admissions standards, it could sustain itself as a four-year institution.

A majority of the board was reported in favor of Dr. Kibbee's proposed new admissions standards, which would give provisional admission to approximately 5,000 academically weak students and place them in "transition centers" rather than regular university courses. In indicating consensus about tighter admissions criteria, however, the majority of the board was divided over whether the remedial function should be carried out by the university or whether efforts should be made to shift this program — and, it is hoped, some of the financing — to the Board of Education. Minority members of the board, however, oppose any tightening of admissions standards and have been fighting to roll back a recently enacted policy that would require entering students to demonstrate at least an eighth-grade reading ability on a test administered by the university. No consensus was reported on the status of John Franklin H. Williams, vice chairman of the board, said that minority-group members of the board, if forced into a choice, would favor to continue open admissions and sacrifice continued free tuition.

Some members of the board, however, felt that the plan could bounce right back to them because it presumes a spending level as much as $100 million above revenues that could reasonably be expected. At its meeting Monday night the board discussed the possibility that even further cuts might be necessary. Some members felt that this could be achieved by additional retrenchment. Others felt that the proper strategy was to push for further state and city funds. Another possibility would be to abandon the policy of free undergraduate tuition, but the board was reported to be deeply split over this issue. Some were reported to believe that the board should bite the bullet and impose tuition.

The message from Albany is clear," said one member. "It is our job as an independent agency to absorb the shock of imposing tuition." Others were said to be adamantly against a tuition policy, while others, possibly sympathetic to the idea, took the position that it was a matter for elected officials to decide.

"Whether to have open access — or even to have university at all — is a matter for the people to decide either by referendum or through their elected representatives," said Mr. Giardino. "They ought not to squeeze us to make that decision."

1ST GRADE EXEMPT IN LOUISVILLE BUSING

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 23 (UPI)—A Federal district judge today ordered about 10,000 first grade pupils entering school next September exempt from court-ordered busing for desegregation in the Louisville-Jefferson County school system.

Judge James F. Gordon, rejecting arguments that the exemption of first graders would cause too great a racial imbalance in the busing plan, said that he believed students entering school for the first time should not be transported away from their nearest school.

CRIME FIGURE TIED TO MELLON CASE

Mother Rented Home From Concern Said to Have Links to Colombo

By MAX SEIGEL

Karen Boyd Mellon, whose two daughters were abducted in Brooklyn last week, rented her Bath Beach apartment through a real estate agency with close ties to Joseph Colombo and other organized-crime figures, it became known yesterday.

The disclosure by sources close to the investigation came a day after it was learned that the Brooklyn District Attorney's office was looking into reports that Seward Prosser Mellon, the Pittsburgh banker, had paid organized-crime figures as much as $275,000 to retrieve the two girls from his former wife.

The girls, Catherine Leigh Mellon, 7 years old, and Constance Elizabeth Mellon, 5, were abducted from a body-guard Friday morning as they were leaving the building at 273 Bay Eighth Street where they had lived with their mother under the assumed name of "Roberts."

It was also reported yesterday that Mr. Mellon has told Federal agents in Pittsburgh that he was in New York on Friday, the day of the abduction.

A spokesman for Mr. Mellon has denied that organized crime figures had been paid to retrieve the girls and has contended that the girls were brought back to their father because of his concern about organized crime links to bodyguards hired by their mother.

The discovery that Mrs. Mellon reportedly acting on the recommendation of the security agency hired to guard her daughters—had rented the top-floor apartment from the Cantalupo Realty Company of 1434 56th Street, added a new dimension to the widening investigation.

The company is known to have links with Mr. Colombo and an assistant district attorney in the office of Eugene Gold was reportedly sent to interview the Mafia leader, who is an invalid at an undisclosed upstate location.

Mrs. Mellon Returning

Philip Solomon, Mrs. Mellon's lawyer—who has been maintaining that it is not his client who has been involved in organized crime, but Mr. Mellon—said yesterday that the divorced wife of the banker would be returning to New York today from Tucson, Ariz., where she has been visiting friends. He added that she would wait to see what action District Attorney Gold would take in the case.

Mr. Solomon disclosed yesterday that it was the private detective agency retained by Mrs. Mellon that had directed her to the Cantalupo agency.

"When I was retained and knew what she wanted done to retain custody of the children, I felt she would need help," he said. "I recommended two or three private investigating services that were highly thought of in the matrimonial field. She made her own deals. It was their baby. Many times I didn't know where she was."

According to Mr. Solomon, Mrs. Mellon chose Superior Investigation Claims Services of 32 Court Street, Brooklyn, an agency that admitted it had done work for such organized-crime groups as the Gallo "family."

"But the work was all legitimate," said Bruce Romanoff, the founder and former president of the agency. Mr. Romanoff, who pleaded guilty to a charge of trying to sell more than $5 million in stolen cashier's checks three years ago, had to resign. He was hired afterwards as a consultant.

Meanwhile, other investigators were sent to Pittsburgh last night to interview the Pennsylvania judge who awarded custody of the girls to their father two years ago. Mrs. Mellon more recently acquired custody under a ruling by a New York judge.

And in Pittsburgh, where F.B.I. agents interviewed a number of persons, the United States Attorney, Blair Griffith, said he did not know whether organized-crime elements in Pennsylvania had been involved in the abduction, but stressed that the case was not being treated as a simple custody battle.

"As far as this office is concerned," he said, "it's not just a family affair."

The report that Mr. Mellon was here on the day of the abduction came a day after it had been reported that the Justice Department and the F.B.I. in New York had known for a week that Mr. Mellon was concerned about organized-crime involvement and planned to retrieve the children from their bodyguards.

For the two girls, whose father has said they are now safely in his custody, the abduction marked the second time they had been spirited away by a parent during the bitter custody struggle.

In December, while visiting their mother in Durham, N.C., the girls were reported abducted by Mrs. Mellon and two agents and brought here, where their mother managed to secure legal custody last month.

America's new sex symbol may yet turn out to be the man in the kitchen.

And something important is really stirring in the American kitchen.

It's changing from an out-of-the-freezer-and-into-the-oven processing center for TV dinners, into a well-equipped room where gourmet creativity is attracting the whole family as would-be chefs. Not least of all, the man of the house.

Craig Claiborne, New York Times Food Editor, calls it "a beautiful revolution."

The $185 billion food industry is taking increasing note of it.

So are General Electric, Sunbeam and other appliance manufacturers engrossed in the profit potential of new kitchen appliances.

And, Forbes Magazine, as its top-management readers will hardly be surprised to learn, already has the subject covered from soup to nuts. It's covered in depth in a major article called "The Kitchen: America's Playground." It's a detailed, documented look at this significant trend in U.S. eating habits and their appetizing ramifications to some segments of American business. As usual, Forbes names names.

What does all this prove or portend for food companies and other related businesses? One thing for certain, change is the "constant" in the American marketplace—and a big one seems to be boiling up in the kitchen.

Keeping ahead editorially this way is one key reason why Forbes keeps surging ahead in advertising gains as well.

Why Forbes last year went ahead of Forbes in advertising pages.

Why Forbes is the only leading business news magazine that was up in advertising in 1975.

Why Forbes in 1976 has just announced biggest first quarter in its history—with advertising pages up 13% over the same period in record-breaking 1975.

And it's why more of America's top corporate executives read Forbes regularly than any major business or news magazine.

To find out what's really cooking.

Metropolitan Museum, Counting Its Visitors, Finds It Has Been a Great Boon to the City

BY ROBERT HOGE

Of the possibilities that the Metropolitan Museum of Art has been offered, but until now it has been a boon to the city.

According to a survey conducted by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the museum has become a major attraction for tourists and city residents alike.

ing the survey, Thomas P. F. Hoving, director of the museum, argued that "support of the Metropolitan and the other world-renowned cultural attractions which rely on city funding for part of their operating expenses is clearly an investment which pays not only for itself many times over but for other city obligations as well."

Mr. Hoving, who is currently in Europe, also said that "at stake are jobs by the thousands in hotels, restaurants, transportation, entertainment and retailing—all of which depend directly on a thriving tourism and the patronage of suburbanites who combine culture and shopping on their trips into the city."

The museum had already experienced one reduction—the current $2.6 million figure was pared down from $3 million the year before.

with the balance coming from proceeds of the Metropolitan's pay-what-you-wish admissions, grants, endowments, individual gifts, membership fees and profits from the shops and parking garage the museum operates.

The Metropolitan outdraws a number of city attractions that one might assume are better known. The museum recorded 3,567,658 visitors last year compared with 1.5 million at the Empire State Building, 1,452,300 at the Statue of Liberty and a million at the United Nations.

Physically, the neo-classical structure impressively commands a four-block expanse, 60-Fifth Avenue, and it seems to loom equally large in the impressions on visitors.

Stephanie Whipp, a slight 25-year-old Chicagoan, stood at the bottom of the imposing Great Staircase in the museum's Main Hall yesterday and tried to recall for a questioner how she first learned of the institution.

shrugged and said, "How do you not know about it?"

Mrs. Whipp, who moved here this month, was escorting two friends from South Bend, Ind., Mary Kay Black, 20 years old, and her brother, Robert Black, 24. Miss Black is a sophomore at St. Mary's College in South Bend, Mr. Black, a second-year law student at Indiana University in Bloomington.

For both it was a first visit to the museum, a second visit to New York. Their parents are both teachers, though not of art; they are here for a week, they plan to see three plays, eat at two restaurants, ride buses and subways but skip shopping.

In the high-ceilinged Fountain Restaurant of the museum, named for the nine-piece sculpture by the Swedish artist Carl Milles which stands in a pool with water playing over the statues, one elderly out-of-towner suddenly realized she was back in town.

Frances Gottesman, a New Yorker until she moved to Hollywood, Fla., six years ago, cheerfully surveyed the thronged luncheon room and said, "This museum is like home to me."

News Summary and Index

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1976

The Major Events of the Day

International: Military action to overthrow President Isabel Martinez da Peron was under way early today in Argentina. She refused to resign and awaited developments in the Casa Rosada, the Government House. The General Confederation of Labor, the only possible source of organized resistance, said the military were making a "tragic mistake" but gave no order for a general strike.

The Federal Government spend $412.8 billion next year, $18.6 billion more than President Ford's recommendation. The Washington Democrat said the increase was needed to stop Mr. Ford's "drastic shift of priorities from human resources programs to defense" and to ensure that "restrictive budget policies do not arrest the beginning of economic recovery."

National: Former Gov. Ronald Reagan upset President Ford in the North Carolina Republican Presidential primary after five straight losses to the incumbent, guaranteeing that he would remain in the race. In the Democratic primary, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia trounced Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, defeating him for the third time in three weeks and leaving his campaign barely alive.

Metropolitan: Governor Carey said the cuts made last week by the Legislature in his budget requests for state departments and agencies were unworkable and counterproductive, and could make it impossible to run the state government. Some could lead to loss of accreditation for state facilities or loss of Federal funds for insufficiently staffed programs.

CORRECTIONS

Technical difficulties in compilation of data may have caused inaccuracies in some prices and volume figures in tables of trading for the New York and American Stock Exchanges published yesterday in The New York Times.

The seven-member school board said the books had been removed because they contained material that was "offensive to Christians, Jews, blacks and Americans, in general." The books confiscated included "The Fixer" by Bernard Malamud, 80 copies of which were seized; "The Naked Ape" by Desmond Morris; "Down These Mean Streets" by Piri Thomas, and "Black Boy" by Richard Wright.

The Crew Cut: It's Inching Its Way Back

Unlike the long-hair revolution, the crew-cut comeback, say its adherents, will be peaceful, with notables who have been faithful to the style—such as George Gobel, lower left, and Archibald Cox—helping to spur the short-hair revival.

Pedro Barrios, above left, gave up Afro for the crew-cut style he wore as a boy. Ernest Dickinson says the crew cut is on the way back.

George Gobel and Archibald Cox.

Jesper Nyebø, top left, lopped off his pony tail for "honesty." Kenneth Marston says he wears a crew cut for the sake of comfort.

The New York Times/Mini Fourth and Gene Marini

By GEORGIA DULLEA
New cut will rise again. Or few good men in crew cuts, this totally off the tops of us, mind you. Almost no one of hair agrees.
"I exclaimed a spokesman Sassoon. "But we don't have as coming into our me's op—not the ones who take arms out of the closet and years a crew cut?" said Nicholas, secretary-treasurer of Bar-n Local 760, pondering the and finally coming up with ian George Gobel. "He's all kn of," Mr. De Luca said

There is, of course, no lack of short-haired notables nowadays. But the caveat at Sassoon's Bonwit Teller shop, as elsewhere, was that the short-hair revival "has nothing to do with a return to the crew cut."
Maybe so. Still, a few crew-cut men see short hair as a straw in the wind. And, after a decade of playing the outcast in a long-haired society, of ignoring the jokes of friends and the pleas of wives and children, they expect to be back in style soon.
Ernest Dickinson, a free-lance writer whose sandy stubble has not grown a millimeter since his Army days in World War II, put it this way:
"These things don't happen overnight. Women's fashions didn't all of a sudden go from miniskirts to great, long skirts; they inched their way down. Same way with hair. Now hair is getting shorter; it's starting to swing."
As if to prove this, a 27-year-old department-store display manager named Frank Kellar walked into Sadie Thompson's on Madison Avenue the other day and asked for "the usual."
Bored with blow-drying long hair and fighting what Gino-Jaock, his stylist, called "a Dagwood cowlick," Mr. Kellar has switched to an inch-high crew cut and set his alarm clock so he can sleep half an hour longer.

"I used to waste 30 minutes on my hair every morning," he said. "Now it's just a matter of a shower, a towel-dry and I'm ready to go."
Sleep, not politics, will surely be the rallying point for the Crew Cut Comeback, if it comes. Expect no social upheaval, no court battles, no boys being sent home from school with orders to grow their hair.
Of Many Advantages
Why, ask men in crew cuts, would anyone protest a style so clean, so healthy, so kind to the cowlick, a style that's cool in summer and sensible all year round?
Kenneth Marston says that he doesn't know why, but that people do "pass remarks" about his crew cut—not that it bothers him. "Of course," he added, "it would make a difference if my wife didn't like it. You're here to please some people, right?"
A 49-year-old mechanical engineer, Mr. Marston insists his hair be cut precisely three-quarters of an inch on top and a quarter-inch long in the back. And like most crew-cut wearers, he grumbles about the lack of barbers skilled in that special art.

"But I've found a good one in the Montgomery Ward Building," he said. Irwin Spiegelman also found a good barber. It's his wife, an assistant professor of anatomy at a hospital here.
"This is the only kind of haircut Martha knows how to do," said the 42-year-old biologist, patting the home-clipper style he has worn since 1958. "Sometimes she says, 'Well, this time I'm going to make it longer on top,' but it always ends up the same crew cut."
The crew cut (for those who missed the 1950's or the Tab Hunter movies on television) flourished in the postwar era. Once skinned in basic training camp, men did not flinch when civilian barbers back home began mowing their heads with electric clippers. (A barber, in those days, lived by his clippers.)
Now hair historians go on forever about this cut, but they generally agree that its two most popular styles were the classic crew cut and a version called "the flat top," possibly after the slang for aircraft carriers of the time.
Anyway, both styles are still taught at the Atlas Barber School, according to Matthew Raguso, the director there. The classic crew cut, as he describes it, has a softer look and is clipped to the same length around the head, anywhere from an eighth to a half inch. The flat top goes straight across, slopes to the back and stands at attention, because of a layer of wax. With longer sides, it combs into the duck-tail effect.

At Atlas, where students give practice haircuts to the public, a crew cut costs only 50 cents, compared with $2.50 for more stylish cuts. Even so, no more than 12 of the 150 customers patronizing the school in an average week want the cut-rate job.
And the crew-cut dozen? "A lot of long-distance bus drivers," Mr. Raguso said. "Sometimes they wear caps."
A Nordic Look
Jesper Nyebø happens to be a fashion designer, not a long-distance bus driver. And his blond close-cropped hair creates what he terms "a Nordic look."
"All of a sudden everybody had loog hair, down to Wall Street people," said the 32-year-old Danish-born designer, recalling his reason for chopping off a perfectly good pony tail a few years ago.

He certainly went to the other extreme. "It was also an honest thing," Mr. Nyebø explained. "I wanted to be able to see the shape of my head. It was almost like being naked, to me. I was hiding behind all that hair."
For Pedro Barrios, an illustrator, it was almost like being in his homeland, Havana. After years of fussing with Afros and such, Mr. Barrios, who is 25, has returned to the crew cut of his school days. Of course he didn't have a big black mustache then. "Today I look like my father back in Cuba," he said with a grin.
But for Chauncey Howell, a reporter in his mid-30's, the crew cut is just a memory. And he himself is just another man who had to change his hair to suit his job.
Mr. Howell adopted the crew cut a few years ago on the admittedly hair-brained theory that it would prolong the life of his locks because short hair needs less nourishment and less brushing. "Thee he got a job with a television station, which required growing his hair and dropping his experiment."
"They like hair at NBC," he said, glumly. "Personally, I think hair is a pain in the neck."

THE Aware Shopper

By Barbara Sullivan
A&P Director of Consumer Affairs

Look Into Food Stamps

You may be eligible if you:

- Support a large family on a small income
- Are elderly with a small income
- Work for low wages or are unemployed
- Have savings of less than $1,500 (or $3,000 for households of two or more which include someone 60 or over)

To find out if you are eligible for food stamps the head of your family should visit the welfare office. Bring papers to verify where you live, the size of your family, your income and expenses.

If you have been certified by the food stamp office, you can buy food stamps at the bank at a discount that is determined by your income, household, and living expenses. You pay for the food stamps with cash—and receive stamps that are worth more than you paid. In top brackets, food stamps can triple or quadruple the buying power of your food dollar.

If approved for food stamps you will receive a food stamp identification card. Keep this card with you when you shop. Food stamps are only for food, or fruit and vegetable seeds. You must pay cash for pet food, soap, cigarettes, paper goods and alcoholic beverages.

A&P welcomes your food stamp business. We urge you to check your eligibility. Even though about 20 million Americans (that's about one in ten) now benefit from food stamps—there are an estimated 20 million more Americans who are eligible and don't know it.

CONSUMER NOTES

3 Packers of Tuna Get U.S. Inspection

By FRANCES CERRA

Since November 1974, when Consumers Union announced that rodent hairs, moth wings and insect parts had shown up in samples of almost all the brands of tuna it had tested, three major packers of tuna in the United States have joined the Federal fish inspection program.

Unlike Federal inspection of meat, poultry and eggs which is mandatory, sanitary inspection of fish products is voluntary.

The companies that have joined the program are Sun Harbor Industries, which packs Breast-O-Chicken, Carnation and many store brands of tuna; Van Camp Seafoods Company, a division of Ralston Purina, which packs Chicken of the Sea, and Star-Kist Foods Inc., which packs tuna under its own name.

Two major companies have not joined the program. They are Cooke & Castle Inc., which packs the Bumble Bee brand, and Del Monte, according to a list of sanitarily inspected fish establishments published by the National Marine Fisheries Service.

Cans Can Be Checked

According to a spokesman for Sun Harbor, supermarket chains buy from more than one packer. Thus, some cans of store-brand tuna may have been federally inspected, while others may not have been.

Consumers can identify inspected tuna by an imprint on the cans that says: "Packed under Federal inspection." This usually appears on the bottom or top of the can.

A Government seal is in no way an assurance of the quality or integrity of a product," a spokesman for Del Monte said in explaining why the company had not joined the Federal inspection program.

"We have our own internal controls that we think are tougher than those operated by the National Marine Fisheries Service," he said.

"People can trust the Del Monte label more than they can a Government seal."

A spokesman for Castle & Cooke Inc. gave a similar explanation:

"Our cleanliness and hygiene standards are far above the Federal standard. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration inspects us regularly, and we're always commended for our high standards."

At the time that the independent testing organization, Consumer Union, tested tuna, it said that "the pattern of permitting unwholesome adulterants appears industry-wide."

Cost of Hearings

The hearings and conferences sponsored by the White House to explain President Ford's Consumer Representation Plans, his alternative to a Consumer Protection Agency, cost taxpayers more than $585,000, according to the General Accounting Office, the financial auditing arm of Congress.

The President's opposition to creation of an independent Consumer Protection Agency, a proposal ardently supported by consumer advocates, has been based on the argument that it would become another costly layer of bureaucracy, Virginia Knauer, the President's consumer adviser, has asserted that the alternative consumer representation plans, which call for internal changes within Federal departments, would make no additional demands on the Treasury, but would involve only reallocations of funds.

Consumer advocates have been skeptical of this assertion, noting such developments as the appointment of Joan Braden to a $37,800-a-year job of coordinator of consumer affairs in the State Department.

Representative Benjamin S. Rosenthal, Democrat of Queens, has asked the General Accounting Office to estimate the cost of implementing the plans. Work on that estimate has not been completed.

The G.A.O.'s estimate of the cost of the hearings and conferences held around the country to explain the consumer representation plans was challenged by Representative Garry Brown, Republican of Michigan and a member of the House Government Operations Subcommittee on Commerce, which held a hearing on the plans. Mr. Brown said that if the salaries of Federal officials who had participated in the hearings and conferences were subtracted, the cost was less than $300,000. He defended subtracting their salaries on the ground that even if the conferences had not been held they would have been paid.

Cars Crash-Tested

Consumers in the market for a new car might want to take note of the results of some recent tests in which the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety crashed a group of 1976 model cars into barriers to see how much it would cost to have each repaired.

The institute, a nonprofit organization supported by the insurance industry, testified at recent hearings of the Senate Commerce Committee, which were called to inquire into the reasons for the rising prices of auto insurance and parts used to repair damages in crashes. On Monday, the Federal Trade Commission charged the General Motors Corporation with monopolizing the manufacture and distribution of crash parts, which include such items as bumpers, fenders and hoods.

Here are the institute's findings on how much it would cost to repair 1976 cars that were driven into barriers at 5, 10 and 15 miles an hour.

Rabbit	$ 28	$ 457	$ 1,212
Impala	$ 132	$ 389	$ 871

The insurance institute also backed up the cars into barriers at 5 miles an hour, and five cars suffered no damage. They were the Gremlin, Ford LTD, Pinto, Gran Fury and Impala.

The dollar value of the damage suffered by the others were $68 for the Chevrette, $115 for the Rabbit, and $101 for the Impala.

The institute also drove the cars into a barrier at an angle to test damage on the front corners.

Here are the results at 5 and 10 miles an hour.

FOOD PRICES IN CITY STABLE FOR A WEEK

Retail food prices in the New York area remained stable last week and the cost of feeding a family of four in the city stayed at last week's level, the Department of Consumer Affairs announced yesterday.

The 38-item market basket cost $71.75, which is 2.2 percent higher than the total of the average prices of the items was 12 months earlier. At that time the market basket cost $70.22.

Commissioner Elinor C. Guggenheimer noted that some supermarkets were trying to get customers to try new foods by redeeming manufacturers' coupons at one and a half to two times their face value.

"These so-called money-saving coupons save you money only if they're used to purchase an item you really need," she cautioned.

Some Heavenly Cheeses, and a Bacon Minus Nitrite

By MIMI SHERATON

It is all too often find out, "ow" or always mean "good" where food is concerned. But for a change, a group of oew or newly discovered bacon, cakes and charcuterie are worth the buying and eating. A recent tasting that turned into a good debauch of a lunch was co-ordinated by a group of extraordinary recently arrived at E.A.T., 1064 Avenue between 80th and 81st Street. Combined with crisp-crust wheat and white rolls from the source, and a bottle of good red wine, each of the six cheeses proved ecstatically, tantalizingly superb. Though prices for all were too high any relation to normal realities, it is the only game in town where varieties are concerned, and so prices at what the traffic will bear. One in the group was Chaurce, a good cheese with a downy white rind like Camembert; and with a tuff-like interior, which had a tingly piquant aroma and flavor. A product of the Champagne in France, this variation is made with a 50 percent butterfat and a flavor that will combine with such forthcoming summer fresh green figs and honey-gold peaches. (It's $6.95 for a 1 1/2-lb. cheese.)

Next, a supple and buttery munster from the Vosges region of Alsace, had a spicy tang, enriched by a natural yeast. It would be a lovely choice with pears and grapes, but as an meal snack sprinkled with carrots and served with thin dark pickled and peppery red radishes, it is perfect. Also technically a Chaurce was a softer, spicier, milder-flavored first cousin, not unlike a Port Salut in aroma and flavor. ($6.95 per pound.)

Next, a small, meltingly rich round, from the Burgundian grape brandy, opened gently sitting at room temperature, spread easily on to the charred crust of the rolls. Similar burger or Lederkranz as it ripens, its flavor is infinitely more sophisticated, mellow, and the ivory cream of cheese was at once buttery yet robust. (It's $9.95 for a 9-ounce round.)

Next, as I liked the Grotin-Chavignol goat round, and the runny, ripening Mont D'Or with its rose-gold rind, are the only two I might hesitate to eat. The price—$2.25 for a round weighing hardly one-quarter pound, and a whopping $8.95 for a 1 1/2-lb. cheese.

Next, both were sublime, the round ripe, rich and dry on the outside, with the earthy overtones typical of the marvelous family of cheeses. The had an almost satanic patina, a lush and silken, with an halfway between crushed bitter and wild mushrooms.

Next—Clifton Fadiman's appellation—cheese-lovers can decide for themselves on the extent of their splurge. Of these unusual cheeses are not shipments come in regularly, to the proprietor, El Zabar, are not available at once, have each is worthy of the wait.

new, the preservative-free bacon sliced and frozen in health food stores left much to be desired, both in texture and taste. In addition, they were priced from $3.50 to $4.75 per pound, close to astronomical when one considers shrinkage during cooking.

But a newcomer on the scene has solved the problem, crisply, deliciously, and at what must be considered to this instance, a moderate price of $2.79 per pound. Cured only with smoke, salt and a little sugar by Nodine's in Goshen, Conn., and sold at Balducci's, 424 Avenue of the Americas (near Ninth Street), this crunchy and savory product is unfrozen and in slabs, so it can be cut to any desired thickness.

Although its color is perhaps a shade grayer than nitrite-treated bacon when fried, its flavor and aroma are indiscernible from the best conventional version. Since it does have a shorter shelf life, buy only a week's supply at a time.

Fresh and wholesome banana bread and golden carrot cake are two of the beautiful-to-see, equally beautiful-to-eat specialties turned out by Naomi, the owner-baker-caterer who holds forth at Montana Palace, now in a new home at 231 East Ninth Street.

Touched lightly with cinnamon and nutmeg, the sunny carrot-laden cake is bound only with unbleached flour and soy oil, while the sweetly moist banana bread, wonderful when counterpointed by cream cheese or yogurt, contains in addition to the same flour, just a little milk—both miracles of rich and subtle flavors, considering the few ingredients they are comprised of.

Available directly from Montana Palace for $1.50 per 14-ounce loaf or $4 for a 2-pound 10-ounce giant, the smaller size is also sold at the Vim & Vigor Health Food Shop, 157 West 57th Street for $2.

The garlic-and-cognac-laden wonders of the trim little Greenwich Village charcuterie, Les Trois Petits Cochons at 17 East 13th Street, will, from now on, be available also at 308 East 62d Street. In addition to the ducking pâté flecked with bitter orange rind and heightened by a generous sprinkling of Grand Marnier $9 (per pound), and the mellow terrine Normande, a pork pâté laced with Calvados and topped with thin, glazed apple slices ($7 per pound), there is a new soothing pleasant pâté ($10 per pound) with assets of pheasant liver and breast meat and a mild hint of cognac.

There are usually 6 to 8 other pâtés to choose from here, a few homemade sausages, green and garlicky snails ready for the oven at $1.90 per half-dozen, and a number of cooked entrees.

Two I sampled were excellent—a waxy veal chasseur with lean and tender chunks of meat, mushrooms, tiny onions and a portion of perfectly cooked rice, while the poulet Grandmère included properly moist and flavorful cuts of chicken, diced bacon, mushrooms, and tiny new potatoes, the last best left out if it will be necessary to reheat this dish. Each was $3.50 for a portion that was adequate if not overly generous.

There are usually several salads here—rice, potato, and a potato salad with diced pigs feet—to round out a meal, plus a large menu of dishes prepared in quantities for parties.

If there's no D'Agostino near you...move.

Kareeba: Jamaica's 'Uniform'

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL
Special to The New York Times

KINGSTON, Jamaica — Fourteen years after independence from Great Britain, Jamaican men have been liberated from the tyranny of jacket and tie. The Kareeba, the styled, open-neck, over-the-shoulder shirt and matching trousers suit has become the universally accepted dress for formal occasions, work and leisure wear.

EIsewhere, it is known by such names as the safari suit and leisure suit, but in Jamaica the Kareeba—a stylized contraction of Caribbean attire—is something special. Wearing it is not only a question of comfort and fashion. It is politics as well.

Looking for ways to demystify its break with the past, the government of Prime Minister Michael Manley's People's National Party adopted the Kareeba as its uniform shortly after coming to power in 1972. The Government even passed a law in Parliament affirming the correctness of the outfit for official functions and the Prime Minister wore a fancy black one when he met Queen Elizabeth II. Although it has existed in various forms in various tropical hot countries, it was not widely known in Jamaica until a whimsical couturier named Ivy Ralph decided to branch out from bush jackets into "a total look," and called it Kareeba, a name now generally applied to the whole genre, regardless of manufacturer.

There are Kareebas in dark tones and shocking turquoise, with contrasting stitching and embroidery, with wide flare lapels and a formal version with a tunic neck and a thin slit breast pocket instead.

However, the military look with epaulets is out, Mrs. Ralph said. "No," she said, of the usual two patch breast pockets. "No. Without the shadow of a doubt, I don't like military things."

Custom-fitted, which is the way Mrs. Ralph sells most of her Kareebas, they cost $65 to $70. Off the rack, they sell for about $10 less.

Michael Manley, Jamaica's Prime Minister, left, and his deputy, David Coore, who is also Finance Minister, favor Kareeba outfits.

WINE TALK

At 1 A.M. the Tasting Was Still Going On

By FRANK J. PRIAL

About 200 wine enthusiasts, wine makers and wine sellers gathered at the Four Seasons Restaurant here the other night for what most of them considered an extraordinary wine tasting and dinner.

Beginning at 7:30 P.M. and not finishing until after 1 A.M., they went through 34 wines and a miniature "dinner" of 17 courses. The evening was billed as the First Annual California Vintners Barrel Tasting Dinner.

Seventeen of California's premium wineries offered a wine of the 1975 vintage—still in barrels at the wineries—and an older vintage, already bottled, of the same wine. There were no barrels at the restaurant. The new wines were brought to New York in special bottles, usually with typewritten labels.

Wente Brothers, for example, offered its 1975 pinot blanc and the 1974 version of the same wine, which already has been bottled. Mirassou Vineyards offered its 1975 and 1972 chenin blancs.

Some Older Cabernets

The oldest wines in the tasting were two cabernet sauvignoos, a 1970 from Louis M. Martini and a 1969 from Chappellet Vineyard, both paired, of course, with the 1975 cabernets from the same two wineries.

Each wine was brought to New York by the owner of the vineyard or the winemaker or both, and one of them commented on each bottle as it was sampled by the guests. Wine men at the dinner who spoke on their own wines included Legh Knowles, president of Beaulieu Vineyard; Ely R. Callaway Jr., the owner of Callaway Vineyard and Winery; Charles Carpy of Freemark Abbey; Robert Mondavi of the Robert Mondavi Winery, Gerald Asher of Monterey Vineyards and John Pardiucci of Pardiucci Wine Cellars.

Planning for the dinner, which cost $30 a person, began months ago, with invitations to the wineries to participate. A number of well-known wineries turned down the idea. "They were afraid the New York crowd was lying in wait, eager to put them down," said one winery man who did take part.

Some wine makers at the dinner admitted that they did not bring their favorite wines because they were worried about the reception the wine would get from the Eastern audience. California wine makers have long felt that their products have been underestimated by Eastern wine drinkers, most of whom are oriented toward European wines.

The planning at the restaurant included getting 3,000 glasses to be able to serve almost 7,000 separate drinks during the course of the evening. They had to be served on time to coordinate with the food and to keep the dinner from running too late.

In fact, the evening lasted an hour longer than originally had been scheduled. Fifteen-minute intermissions were scheduled to permit waiters to clear the tables, but table-hopping guests clogged the aisles and slowed down the proceedings a bit. Also, speakers limited to two minutes often took five or six.

The original idea was to permit the guests to leave the main dining room for a smoke in the grill room on the 52d Street side of the restaurant. No smoking was permitted during the dinner. However, after the second chaotic intermission, everyone was asked to remain in his seat for the third. The entire restaurant was closed to the public for the dinner.

The 17 courses were necessarily small. The portions of raw turtle, paté of pheasant and foie gras came to about a tablespoon each. Each guest received one rib of the roast rack of lamb. "It was just perfect," said Ale Lichine, one of the guests. "The portion were estimated almost perfectly."

There was little agreement on the wines, but some of the dishes singled out special praise included the medallions of monk, the quail, the veloutés of crayfish, breast of duck.

500 Cases Consumed

Approximately 500 cases of wine were ordered for the dinner and any guest who drank everything that was poured for him consumed an estimated three bottles of wine during the evening. Most guests did not drink all the wine or three ounces in each glass, many did. There was no opportunity to out-taste, as is done at all professional tastings. Did anyone get drunk? "There were a few," said one of the dinner room captains smiling broadly, "but nobody paid any attention to them."

Most of the wines served at the dinner out including the ones not yet bottled course—are available in the New York course—or will be when they are released by wineries. Most are made in small quantities and usually are carried only by the wine stores.

The wines tasted—each with its 1975 counterpart—were: Wente Brothers 1974 pinot blanc and 1974 chardonnay; Chateau St. Jean 1974 Freemark Abbey 1973; two chenin blancs, 1974 and 1972; Mirassou Vineyards 1972; Joseph Phelps 1972; Beaulieu 1973; Sini 1972 gewurztraminer; Ridge 1974 Lytton Springs; Callaway 1974; St. Raphael 1973; Robert Mondavi 1973 pinot blanc; Sterling 1972 merlot; and four cabernet sauvignoos—Pardiucci 1973, Clos du Val 1970 and Chappellet 1969.

Market Place Declining Rates and Call Protection

By JOHN H. ALLAN

Interest rates on corporate bonds have declined enough this year to raise a new concern for investors. The high-yielding bonds they bought in 1969, 1970 and 1971 may be called out from under them as corporations try to cut costs.

Such a possibility almost became reality last month when the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company for a time contemplated refunding $100 million of 9.35 percent debentures that it sold almost six years ago when interest rates were at their peaks in the "credit crunch" of 1969-1970.

At least three studies have been written this year to alert investors to the possibility that those high yields set during the credit crunch may not last to full maturity of the bonds.

Over $18 billion of publicly traded long-term bond issues with interest coupons of 8 percent or higher is becoming refundable, now that five years have passed since the 1969-1970 period of high interest rates, Salomoo pointed out.

Most bond issues carry five years of "call protection." Some carry 10 years. That means that they will remain outstanding at least that number of years no matter what happens to interest rates.

Interest rates have been rising so much of the time for the last 15 years that investors paid little attention to such guarantees. Corporations had few choices but to issue bonds by moving higher almost constantly.

In February, however, yields on long-term corporate bonds dipped to their lowest levels in more than two years, and corporate treasurers began to turn to their calculators to see when some refinancing might make sense.

More recently, however, long-term corporate bond yields have headed downward once again, and some Wall Street bond traders are predicting that yields on triple-A bonds may dip below 8 percent. If so, the potential savings seem too big for corporations to resist.

Since the Jersey Bell bond sale another American Telephone subsidiary sold debentures at a cost of 8.63 percent, or 22 basis points above the trigger point, and the increase pushed the potential threat of refundings into the background.

Market Place Armco Unit Sets Steel Price Rise Of 4.5c a Pound

By GENE SMITH

The Armco Steel Corporation said yesterday that its advanced materials division planned to raise the price of flat rolled stainless steel by 4.5 cents a pound, effective with shipments of April 5.

Price Changes would be reduced to 20,000 pounds from the previous 40,000 pounds.

Allegany Ludlum Industries Inc., declined comment on the Armco move but a spokesman pointed out that last December his company had tried to put through increases of 3 to 6 percent on stainless steel sheet.

When these prices did not take, Allegany Ludlum suspended the move until March 31 at which time they are now scheduled to go into effect.

In another pricing action, the Monsanto Chemicals and Petrochemicals Company, a subsidiary of the Monsanto Company said it would increase the bulk price of Lytrox plastic pigments by 2 1/2 cents a solid pound, effective April 19.

Prices on drum shipments for truck load and less than truck load quantities will be raised by 3 cents a solid pound.

Finance and Business

A Analysis in Reports Urged

Mr. Olson, president of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, said yesterday that financial statements should include more data than they do today.

Business managers of the future will, in addition to being more politically and financially sophisticated, have more women in their ranks, Reginald H. Jones, chairman of the General Electric Company, said last night at a dinner of the Wharton Business School Club of New York at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

Mr. Jones defined the future managers in remarks after receiving the club's Joseph Wharton Business-School Award, named for the founder of the University of Pennsylvania School. He is a Wharton graduate, class of 1939.

"More women," he said, "are starting to qualify themselves by majoring in such disciplines as engineering, finance or law—traditional paths to business leadership." He added: "More women aspire to become business executives and more men want to see them succeed."

Mr. Spak, a 53-year-old Belgian, is the son of the late Paul-Henri Spak, one of the pioneers in the movement for European unity.

L. William Seidman, Assistant to the President for Economic Affairs, explained here last night the reasons for the Administration's effort to cut the deficit to fiscal 1977 to $43 billion despite objections from the Democratic Congress.

The Administration, he said, wants to err in the direction of too little stimulus rather than too much. "The rationale for our position is political as well as economic," he said of a joint dinner.

It's easier, he said, "to generate political support" for added spending if it proves needed. It's much tougher, he remarked, to reduce outlays.

The economic reason for the Administration's bias toward a reduced deficit, he said, is the continuing risk of "reigniting inflationary pressures." The recovery, according to the Presidential aide, is "proceeding in line with or ahead of the Administration's forecast."

FEDERAL BANKS LOSE ROUND ON TERMINALS

WASHINGTON, March 23 (UPI)—The United States Court of Appeals held today that national banks must comply with state laws before establishing remote computer hookups in supermarkets and elsewhere.

The three-judge Appellate Court unanimously ruled that such unmanned or manned computer terminals outside national bank buildings were branches. Therefore, the court said, the Comptroller of the Currency lacked the authority under Federal banking law to exempt such facilities from complying with state bank law.

The decision, upholding a Federal District Court ruling, was a victory for state-chartered banks, who also must comply with state banking laws. But the ruling presumably will hinder nationally chartered banks in their efforts to take advantage of new technology for electronic fund transfers.

The computer hookups can be installed in groceries, shopping centers, factories and offices. Bank customers are given plastic "key cards" that identify them to the computer and allow check cashing and deposits and other activities.

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER... Prices of New York-related bonds and notes continued to advance yesterday, helped by the growing conviction that the state was well on its way in overcoming its financial problems.

most of the municipal bonds... Government bond prices advanced 1/4 to 1/2 point generally in moderate trading. One dealer said the market apparently was "marking time in anticipation of the Treasury auction today with a February 1981 maturity."

Dealers anticipate that the new notes will bear an interest rate of 7.40 percent. Federal funds remained steady yesterday at the 4 1/2 percent level. The funds are commercial excess reserves commercial banks may lend one another.

The Treasury yesterday announced it would raise $1 billion to new cash at its monthly bill auction next Wednesday. The Government agency will offer $3.2 billion in 52-week bills to redeem $2.2 billion in maturing bills and to raise extra cash.

Reflecting the upswing, M.A.C. bonds yesterday climbed as much as 2 points, or $20 per $1,000 of face value. On Monday they advanced as much as 5 points on top of their gains of 6 points in the preceding week.

The Trade Center, as First Leases Expire

By ALAN S. OSER

You can't tell the World Trade Center without a scorecard. Here is the way the six buildings line up:

• The North Tower (One World Trade Center), 110 stories, 3.5 million square feet of rentable space.

• The South Tower (Two World Trade Center), the same situation.

• The hotel (Three World Trade Center), 500,000 square feet, 850 rooms, 20 stories.

• The Southeast Plaza building (Four World Trade Center), nine stories, 500,000 square feet.

• The Northeast Plaza building (Five World Trade Center), eight stories, 730,000 square feet.

• The United States Customhouse building (Six World Trade Center), 770,000 square feet, eight stories.

Scorecard in hand, it is possible to follow the development and rental game as brought to the public by the trade center's general manager of development and rentals, Cornelius J. Lynch. He was sitting in a 44th floor dining room with an assistant, Thomas F. Donovan, one day last week and reporting on the center's progress as it passes something of a milestone.

The milestone is the expiration this year of the first set of five-year leases that the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey signed for its downtown citadel of international commerce. It seems that 30 of the tenants are renewing and four are moving out. Of those that are renewing, 12 are expanding their space by an average of 20 percent. It will take a game of checkers to achieve this, but the World Trade Center is a pretty big checkerboard.

In round numbers, the trade center has nine million square feet of office space and a million square feet for parking and commercial space. In addition, there is the hotel.

These are numbers to match the imposing height of the two towers. The entire office inventory in Nassau County is only 8.1 million square feet.

The center's rental task would be formidable even without the weak market of the mid-1970's, which comes on top of the extraordinary building surge of the late 1960's and early 1970's.

Downtown rents for space comparable to the trade center's, once higher than the center's, have fallen to levels at or below the center's, Mr. Lynch added. And the trade center will not give such concessions as taking over a tenant's lease for his old space.

It will, however, allow rent skewing—lowering the tenant's rent in the early stages of his lease and raising it later (interest payments compensate for the delay), with the total five-year payment coming out the same. Tenants must be in a business related to international commerce.

Playing in these conditions, the trade center team has compiled the following statistics: 7.2 million square feet of the office space, or 82 percent, rented. About 400,000 square feet of the rented space is still under construction. Mr. Lynch continued, in each of the 3.5-million-square-foot towers about 2.9 million square feet are rented.

When the rented space is broken down between the public and private sectors, a different picture emerges. All of the 3.6 million square feet in the government sector have been rented—2 million of it to the state, 800,000 for the Customhouse and 800,000 to the Port Authority itself.

But of the 5.4 million square feet marked for the private sector, 3.6 million have been rented. In 1974 the center rented out 310,000 square feet of this space and in 1975 it rented 328,000 square feet, Mr. Lynch said. This is a pace down, not surprising, from the "ballooning in the beginning," as he put it.

Most of the trade center's private tenants are small space users. Of the 500 in all, fewer than 20 have taken more than a full floor—a full floor in the tower buildings being 40,000 square feet. About 50 percent of its tenants occupy less than 2,000 square feet. To the center's officials, this signifies that the complex is succeeding in its mission of drawing together all the marketing and servicing facilities of world trade. "Sixty nations are represented here," Mr. Lynch explained.

The trade center is signing leases in all its office structures except the Southeast Plaza building, which is still under construction.

It will be ready for tenants early next year. As for the commercial space, 100,000 square feet are covered by signed leases, Mr. Lynch said. There are 200,000 square feet of space on the immense retail concourse, about half of which is still unopened. When it opens early next year it will make one vast underground shopping mall.

As for the hotel, the prospecting is "bright" in the opinion of Ralph Guthrie, executive vice president of the Corland Corporation, and "we should find ourselves in construction in six months."

Corland, the successor Winston Corporation, which built shopping centers across the country in the 1960's, has a co-ordinating agreement with the Port Authority to take a long-term lease on the hotel. It has been working for months on obtaining financing. The basic foundation work is all but complete.

The typical small tenant in the trade center pays $7.88 a square foot on the lower floors, but rents are going up. One key change in new leases mainly affecting larger tenants is a result of the bugle rise in electricity costs.

In new leases, the center will be responsible for tenants' electricity costs only up to 50 cents per square foot. All above that will be passed on to the tenant.

Researcher Certification Sought

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

With the results of survey research being used increasingly in business, politics and government the time has come for some form of auditing that will give people faith in the numbers. That's what Alvin A. Achenbaum of Canter, Achenbaum, Heekin, marketing counselors, told the folks attending the Conference on Marketing Research and the Law sponsored yesterday at the Biltmore Hotel by the New York Chapter of the American Marketing Association.

What Mr. Achenbaum proposed was a Certified Public Researcher to do for survey research what the Certified Public Accountant has done for bookkeeping.

In making his case for the former executive vice president at Walter Thompson and Grey Advertising made the point that public officials are basing all types of decisions on survey data "yet, we know and they know that often these numbers are based on shoddy techniques."

Another problem, he noted, is that those who usually authorize the research don't understand how it's done and the middle management that does frequently is afraid to ask for enough money for properly designed surveys.

"Auditors," he said, "have a way of shaming the practitioner into doing what is right."

Mr. Achenbaum was not just talking through his hat and proposing some wild impractical scheme. His firm, as he pointed out, did an auditing job on the research that backed the claims made for Merit, Philip Morris's new cigarette.

There are three things necessary to get the C.P.R. concept started, said Mr. Achenbaum—a code of ethics, a code of procedural standards and certification by a licensing organization. As to the ethics code, he said that Paul Gerhold, former president of the Advertising Research Foundation, is already working on such a project "and trying to get a group of leading professionals concerned with research ethics and quality to sponsor it."

He said that, in the area of procedural standards, who ever is charged with codifying them should attack those areas on which immediate agreement can be obtained such as sampling design and weight and response rates. His firm recently did some work in this area for the Federal Trade Commission and he hopes it can soon be published.

Matsushita Plans a 3-Year Drive

In hopes of making its own name as familiar as the name of its products, Matsushita Electric Industrial, Japan's largest manufacturer of consumer electric and electronic products, is preparing to initiate a three-year advertising, public relations and promotion campaign that will cost about $1 million in the first year.

The brand names are Panasonic, Technics, Quasar and National, which is used mostly outside of North America. "What we want people to understand is that Matsushita is not just a Japanese corporation but an international one," said Russ Johnson, vice president and general manager of communications of the United States subsidiary.

He was being interviewed at Grey & Davis, which is handling the public relations part of the effort. Ogilvy & Mather does the corporate advertising; Ted Bates & Company, the consumer goods advertising; and Doremus & Company, the financial advertising.

The advertising part of the image campaign will, in the beginning, run only in Fortune and Time B (business) editions and spread out from there if the advertising proves effective.

Matsushita, Mr. Johnson said, wants first to work its charms on the financial and business communities and then filter down to the rest of society.

A survey of Fortune and Time B readers in February in which Matsushita was matched against two similar companies showed Matsushita at the bottom of the list when it came to awareness. Another survey will be taken at a later date to see if the ads have had an effect.

Ogilvy & Mather has prepared five spreads (two-page ads). The first will be about Konosuke Matsushita, who built the $4.6 billion company from a $30 start, and the second will focus on Masaharu Matsushita, his son-in-law and current president. The remaining ads in the series will talk about other things the company is into besides consumer electronics.

The ads will run between April and December when another awareness survey will be conducted. "Heaven forbid we come out with less," said Mr. Johnson.

And the guy's not even a native. Saatchi Wins Schweppes

Aboard the packet just arrived from England was a message that indicates that Saatchi & Saatchi/Garland-Compton has just won the Schweppes account for all of Britain that was resigned by J. Walter Thompson. Billings are put at about $3.5 million.

Low Tar Cigarette Test American Tobacco says that it is going into test marketing in Houston Monday of what it chooses to call "the first low tar 120." The brand is American Lights 120's, a 120 millimeter cigarette that will be available in regular and menthol. The advertising by Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn will also claim: "Less tar than the best selling low tar king."

People James K. Agnew, a senior vice president of McCann-Erickson Inc., has been appointed general manager of the Los Angeles office. Robert D. Adams has been named advertising director of the American Distilling Company. Leo J. Murray has joined the Warner Cable Corporation as vice president of public affairs.

Economic Analysis: Wage-Price Curbs

Continued From Page 53 farm, nongovernment workers showed February up 7.7 percent from a year ago, with the annual rate for December-January-February only 5.7 percent.

Allowing for substantial gains in productivity expected to come with economic recovery, unit labor cost increases are likely to be small, Mr. Greenspan indicates. "We don't have a problem," he says. "There's no point in inventing one."

However, Mr. Greenspan is not quite so optimistic as Treasury Secretary William E. Simon seemed to be last week. Almost casually, Mr. Simon told reporters that inflation would be down to 2 percent within two to three years. Treasury economists had no intention to back up such optimism.

Policy Goals Emphasized They told their colleagues in other agencies that Mr. Simon's Administration has no intention to state policy goals. This brought knowing smiles all around. For Mr. Simon is a Wall Street bond trader who believes deeply in intuitive "feel" of the market.

It may be that the Brookings economists differ from those of the Administration less on technical issues, or even on wage-determination theories, than on the importance of a rapid return to low unemployment.

"Tight labor markets are the best cure for social problems," Mr. Schultz says. "Employers do more than a hundred manpower retraining programs for women, teen-agers and minorities." The World War II demand for workers, military and civilian, did more to raise black-white income ratios than anything since, he says.

New Entente Implified For the sake of the social gains that they expect full employment to bring, the Brookings economists are thinking about wage-restraint devices—for example, if only labor would agree to limit wage increases to some level in exchange for the promise of a "catch-up" tax cut if prices rise more than some specified amount. Government cannot hold out the prospect of a tax cut in a boom, Mr. Schultz and Mr. Okun reason, but with unemployment above 7 or even 8 percent such a policy would be acceptable.

This implies a new entente between Government and labor, and that suggests a need for a New Administration—perhaps even a Republican Administration, the Democratic economists concede, if headed by President with good trade union rapport.

Excerpts From Statement by House Budget Panel Chair

WASHINGTON, March 23 —Following are excerpts from the statement made by Representative Brock Adams of Washington, chairman of the House Budget Committee, in presenting his own proposed budget figures for the next fiscal year.

The President's restrictive fiscal and spending policies threaten to arrest the beginnings of economic recovery we are now experiencing. This policy reflects a callousness toward the unemployed which Congress must reject. Therefore, the principal fiscal policy goal is to assure a sustained recovery through 1977.

Comparison of Budget Outlays for Fiscal 1977

Table comparing 'Continuation of Current Programs + Request' with 'House Budget Chairman's Recommendations' for various categories like Military, Science, Space & Technology, etc.

* Administration Estimate; Contains no allowance for Inflation in Non-Military Programs

To achieve that objective— [1] The 1975 tax cuts should be extended, but the Congress should reject the President's mixed bag of additional tax proposals, providing further cuts in progressive general income tax rates, on the one hand, and offsetting them with increases in regressive social security tax on the other hand; and [2] The Congress should continue its fiscal year 1976 policy of targeted spending over the President's budget to provide economic stimulus and reduce unemployment; it should reject the President's approach to economic stimulus through tax incentives to the business sector.

The President's policy of phasing out the public service jobs program should be scrapped. The Congressional budget should provide increased spending to continue the public service jobs program and employment and training programs targeted at special groups (such as summer youth, welfare recipients, and the aged). In addition, the weakest sector of the housing industry—rental housing—should be stimulated through increased Department of Housing and Urban Development assistance ($5 billion) for rental housing mortgages.

als would reduce the unemployment rate at the end of 1977 to 6.2 percent, well below the President's projection of 6.7 percent.

3413 billion spending level provide for important program reforms.
FEDERAL PAY—They accept the President's proposals for pay reform, with savings estimated at $1.2 billion in fiscal year 1977 and $1.04 billion through fiscal year 1981.
FOOD STAMPS—They continue the food stamp program—roughly at about $5.8 billion—but with savings of about $400 million assumed through a reasonable approach to reform, rejecting the drastic $1.4 billion in reductions proposed by the President.
HEALTH PROGRAM—They assume enactment of cost-control legislation designed to curb the rise in Medicare and Medicaid spending, with a fiscal year 1977 impact of about $700 million.
VETERANS PROGRAMS—They propose to tighten or eliminate the prepayment provisions in the veterans readjustment programs, which can save at least $200 million in fiscal year 1977.
Realistic Budgeting
FISCAL YEAR 1978 EXPERIENCE—Our first year of experience with the budget process demonstrated the difficulty of making authoritative spending decisions in many areas. In veterans readjustment benefits, for example, an overly optimistic economic forecast by the President resulted in the need for budget amendments totaling $2 billion through the fiscal year. Similarly, an over-optimistic forecast concerning offshore oil receipts resulted in a more than $5 billion swing in the Federal Budget.

Revision of $890 million in the Administration's own estimates of the savings it could get out of its proposed changes in the Medicare program. Despite the fact that the Administration itself made the revision, the change is not reflected in the budget figures, Mr. Adams said. The six other examples include the Administration's alleged failure to locate any money for fighting forest fires, an expense that has been approximately $100 million a year, and the assumption that the weather and international demand for American agricultural products will be so good as to reduce the expenditures of the Commodity Credit Corporation by $300 million, or 45 percent below the levels of the current year.

Mr. Adams said that enactment of the budget as he would like to see it would bring unemployment down to 6.2 percent by the end of next year. Instead of the 6.7 percent projected in the Administration's projection. "The difference is the number of unemployed would be approximately 400,000 persons.

to announcing his own budget targets for the new fiscal year, which will begin Oct. 1, Mr. Adams also accused the Administration of knowingly making false estimates of at least seven different budget items in an attempt to make its own spending recommendations look smaller than they really are.

Among the alleged "understatements or unlikely assumptions" in the Ford budget, according to Mr. Adams, was a revision of $890 million in the Administration's own estimates of the savings it could get out of its proposed changes in the Medicare program.

Balanced Spending for Domestic and Defense Needs

Unlike the President's drastic shifting of priorities from human resource programs to defense, a $413 billion would reduce the unemployment rate at the end of 1977 to 6.2 percent, well below the President's projection of 6.7 percent.

Reforms of Existing Federal Program

A great deal of the spending proposal for fiscal year 1977 can be achieved through Congressional reform of current programs and activities. Consequently, the recommendations embodied in the ly—that he just did what looked attractive and would help the Republican system of patronage, but that he never saw the reality of rising taxes or the need for more services as the country grew older and more urban. "I think Ralph has high intentions, and I tell him that," said Hannah Kormanoff, the Supervisor of the City of Long Beach and a Democrat. "But sometimes I'm not sure he's close enough to the people."

Critics have also circulated a list of Caso relatives who allegedly work for the county. Mr. Caso calls the list "garbage" and cites specific inaccuracies, but acknowledges that it is partly accurate. His sister, for example, earns $13,175 at the Nassau Coliseum ("And she works hard—if we gave her a political job, it wouldn't be for $13,175 a year," Mr. Caso said). Several in-laws got their jobs through his wife's side. The Milone construction family, which has bad some power of its own.
Mrs. Caso, the mother of two teen-age children, does all the work in their Merrick home except for mooking cleaning service, he says. He says he frequently takes his work home in the evening and falls asleep on the couch.

Attorney from Suffolk and get my head handed to me," Mr. Caso said. "But we can bring in surgeons from all over the world. But I guess we need that orthopedic surgeon, Don. Could you just remind him he's not coming here to create an empire? It is not empire-building time for Mr. Caso, either. He is well aware that his own county Republican chairman, the powerful Joseph M. Margiotta, favors Perry B. Duray for the 1978 gubernatorial nomination. "I have statewide experience from 1974 (when he ran and lost with Mr. Wilson) and that should be worth something," Mr. Caso said. Mr. Caso has tried to make himself available to speak around the state, and he visits Washington occasionally. He frustrated by creding that he is frustrated by trying to gain publicity living near a New York City, where the news media have more cosmic concerns than one suburban county.

A Guest of French
Often when he does gain attention, it is for a rash remark or for losing his temper at a Board of Supervisors meeting. Recently, one man began shrieking that Mr. Caso was "a crook" beyond the five-minute limit, and Mr. Caso had him ejected.
In a sense, Mr. Caso had to leave the United States to gain one of his biggest honors. The French National Television network invited him over to represent the anti-Concorde sentiment here, and he was even taken on a brief flight, but Mr. Caso promised to continue his fight against landings at Kennedy International Airport.
Back on Long Island, he returned to his budget problems, and Paris became a fast-fading memory. For all the aggravation he is having in Mineola, he might just as well be the chief executive somewhere else. He would like Albany.

TV: 'Dance in America'

WNET Show Tonight Features Twyla Tharp and Essay by Arlene Croce

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR Twyla Tharp, the choreographer, meets "Dance in America," the public television series, tonight at 9, and the result is something of an artistic standoff. More than half of the hour (about 35 minutes) on WNET/13 is devoted to a history of popular dances in the 1930's and 40's. The rest concentrates exclusively on Miss Tharp's "Sue's Leg," a work that refers directly to those dances with wit, admiration and superb technique.

It should be stressed, though that for all of the doubtlessly unintentional imbalance, the hour is crammed with delightful moments. The dance essay avoids the more predictable and familiar film clips (Astaire and Rogers etc.) and uses a good deal of newsreel excerpts to document everything from the Charleston, jitterbugging, dancing and mechanical art ballets performed on the tops of skyscrapers to acrobatics, dance marathons and flagpole stunts.

Two wonderful bits feature Eleanor Roosevelt. One has the tall, somewhat gawky First Lady joining in a spirited square dance, obviously for campaign purposes. The other has her watching, with some identifiy, two dancers perform a new silly pastiche called "The Eleanor Glide."

Most of the essay is focused on black performers, on such outstanding stars as Fats Waller, Cab Calloway and Bill (Bojangles) Robinson. Mr. Waller, who died in 1943 at the age of 39, is seen in some invulnerable movie clips singing "Ain't Misbehavin'" and "I've Got My Fingers Crossed." For "Sue's Leg" (the work is dedicated to Suzanne Well, director of the Walker Arts Center), Miss Tharp uses several Waller recordings as her primary music source. This particular choreographer's selection of music for her works is remarkably inspired. Miss Tharp and three members of her company—Kenneth Rinker, Rose Marie Wright and Tom Rawe—use the Waller rhythms and phrases to gyrate, glide and undulate their way through an incredibly broad range of styles, statements and moods. The momentarily bilious turns suddenly charming. The suspiciously dignified becomes beautifully playful. As the program notes, this is "a dance about dancing."

THE ROBERT MACNEIL REPORT

Following the deluge of grand, sometimes spectacular visual images in the opening dance essay, Miss Tharp and her three dancers appear a bit too purified, a touch over-explained. The imbalance is by no means fatal, merely puzzling and, perhaps for some, disturbing.

People drive dogs crazy.

Pet shrink Michael Fox, howling here with his pet wolf, says dogs are getting more neurotic all the time. A lot of dogs think they're people and would rather mate with their owners than with other dogs. Don't blame them. They're just mirrors for the emotional hangups of their masters. Fox's favorite breed? That "Renaissance man of dogs," the mongrel. Plus wolves, of course.

Glen Campbell was so dirt poor back in '56 he couldn't even afford a new T-Bird. Now he's sitting on one with $12,000 in nice little extras. Meet the Jimmy Carter of Tin Pan Alley, riding high again with hits like "Rhinestone Cowboy" and "Country Boy."

Dr. Irving Cooper may be the work innovative brain surgeon. A wine-bottle gave him the idea for cryosurgery. Using scalpel? he destroys diseased brain cells to paralytics "imprisoned in their own bodie."

Vidal Sassoon used to be some cut-up, but then actress-wife Beverly "ruined my hobby." The Head Hair Honcho keeps himself sharp with yoga, calisthenics, meditation, vitamin-saturated glop, and 36-hour fasts.

Lola Falan Fabergé tigris ever Lola war gets...like four specials and $ week in Vegas described by Barnes as "a grenade of a v she's mellowe now...doesn't drink or cuss."

Ina Balin has played Sophia Loren's rival and Elvis Presley's girlfriend but her newest role's her favorite: instant mother to three Vietnamese orphans.

Alice is moving that restaurant because the city fathers of Stockbridge won't let her be. "They hate my life-style...I have more fun...a better sex life." Want her recipe for Fish in Cream and Cognac? See People.

The writin' Wallaces churn out 5,750 golden advance. Wife Sylvia's first novel's made $75 words a day. Gold? Irving's sold 97 million books. The fore publication. The story of the first Siamc People's Almanac, with son David, brought a $110,000 with daughter Amy, already has a $50,000 adv

Sad suds. These five soap opera queens have enjoyed 11 marriages, four miscarriages, two rapes, and nine brushes with death. No abortions yet, but tune in tomorrow.

How's that for diversity? The fascinating folk in the new People range from a pet shrink to a brain surgeon...from a clutch of sudsy heroines to a family full of demon writers.

From first to last, People is surprising...just like people. No wonder it's growing like crazy.

Our rate base is already at 1,600,000. Which means 9,856,000* people are plunging into People every week. And they're not just glancing. They're reading. Cover to cover.

Because they have a special relationship with their special magazine. It's now. The Scene In A Magazine. The mid-70's in print.

And these are the mid-70's people. They're young, educated, prospering, urban, on-the-move men and women...intensely interested in the new life-styles they read about in People. It's an audience like no other in magazines.

Yes, People's the new marketplace for all kinds of people products...like cars, cosmetics, clothes, appliances, liquor, travel, credit cards. And the great thing is, you can afford the kind of frequency that builds real response. Because People's out-of-pocket cost is very low.

Now you've got a brand new media option...a unique new audience mix...a whole new way to go. *Publisher's estimate.

Suddenly, it's the place to be.
